Craig, from Galston, daily

GIRVAN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIRVAN is a parish of about 15,000 acres, in the district of Carriek—the town, a burgh of barony, is 90 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 56 s.w. of Glasgow, 85 n.w. of Portpatrick, 81 n.e. of Stranraer 21 s. by w. of Ayr, 13 n. by e. of Ballantrae, 12 s.s.w. of Maybole, and 6 s.w. of Daily, situated on the left bank of the Garvan or Girvan, near to its influx with the sea, and at a point exactly opposite the islet called AILSA CRAIG. This rock, which is eleven miles distant, rises out of the Frith of Clyde, to the height of one thousand and seventy-five feet. It is two and a half miles in circumference, and the top, which is conical, is covered with a luxuriant crop of heath, grass, ferns, and other plants, which feed great numbers of goats and rabbits. All around, on the precipitous sides of the rock, uniformly nestle almost inconceivable numbers of solan geese, puffins, and gannets, which flutter about, and produce an incessant deafening noise. On a long terrace or shoulder of the craig, at the elevation of 200 feet from the base, stands a deserted square tower, or castellated house, still very perfect as a ruin. Higher up issue two sparkling and beautiful springs of water, one of which forms a marshy plain, covered with various plants, amongst others the hydrocotyle vulgaris, of extraordinary magnitude. The rock (which is in the parish of Daily) belongs to the Marquis of Ailsa, who draws from it a yearly rental of £20, which is paid by the feathers of the fowls and the rabbit skins. Naturalists and botanists would find a visit of value, in increasing their knowledge of the vegetable world. The harbour of Girvan, which underwent considerable improvements in 1869-70, and still further and more extensive in 1881-82, at the expense of the Harbour Commissioners, is now considered safe and convenient for shipping. Large quantities of grain of various kinds are annually exported hence, chiefly to Liverpool and Glasgow. The steamer "Amethyst" carries goods to and from Glasgow weekly. The trade in coal and lime is important—the mines of the former and the quarries of the latter being numerous in the neighbourhood. Formerly the chief business of the town consisted in the manufacture of a variety of cotton and woollen goods for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, which then afforded employment to the bulk of the inhabitants; the principal trade of the place now is herring fishing, which occurs twice a year, beginning in December and May. The government of the town is vested in two bailies and twelve common councilmen, three of the latter being chosen annually, on the retirement or otherwise of the like number, on the 12th of October; the Earl of Stair is the superior of the borough. Girvan is a station on the Ayr, Maybole and Girvan branch of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway. In October, 1871, a new line of railway was commenced, called the Girvan and Portpatrick line. It is 31½ miles in length, and was opened in 1876, and greatly facilitates commerce between Glasgow and the North of Ireland. The places of worship are as follows, viz.: two churches of the Establishment, one for United Presbyterians, a Free church, and one each for Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyan Methodists. The Episcopalian church is a neat structure of Gothic architecture; the interior is beautifully decorated; it has also a very commanding pulpit, and was erected at a cost of eleven hundred pounds. To the parochial school, which is now under a parish School Board, a valuable donation was made, by the late Mrs. Crawford, of Ardmillan, who left the interest of £1,000 for ever to the teachers, for the education of forty children, subject only to the deduction of two guineas, to be distributed in small prizes amongst the pupils. The same munificent lady left also the interest of £1,000, of which £12 is given to the precentor of the church, for the instruction of ten of the children in sacred music, and the balance to be divided among the poor householders not receiving parochial relief. There are also two other schools here under the borough School Board, one of which was built in 1875, at a cost of £3,500, for 550 scholars. A market, chiefly for grain, is held on Monday; and the fairs are on the first Mondays of April and October, for stock hiring servants, and general business. Population of Girvan, in 1871, 4,791, and of the parish, 5,685.

The town is agreeably situated on a rising ground on the north bank of the river Irvine, about a mile from its junction with the Garnock water and the sea, and upon the line of the Glasgow and South-Western railway. Distance from Edinburgh, 67 miles w.s.w.: 25 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 11 n. of Ayr, 11 s. of Beith, and 7 w. of Kilmarnock. Irvine unites with Ayr, and with Campbelltown, Inverary and Oban in Argyleshire, in returning one member to Parliament, who is styled the member for the Western Burghs; the present representative is Lieutenant-Colonel Richard F. F. Campbell, of Craigie. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and twelve councillors. A baillie court is held every lawful day, as business may require; and one for the recovery of small debts, before the justices, is also held every Monday. A sheriff court is held every alternate month. There are several commodious inns, the King's Arms and the Eglinton Arms, High street, for commercial or posting purposes are both well worthy of support. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs on the first Tuesday in May and the third Monday in August. The Mary-mass races are held on the third Saturday of August, and the Eglinton Hunt Meeting (over Bogside course) generally in the beginning of May. Eglinton Castle, the seat of the Earl of Eglinton and Winton, stands within two miles of the burgh, and is famous in connection with the grand tournament held here in 1839. The noble earl permits the great freedom of access to the grounds and gardens; admission, however, is only obtainable by ticket, which may be had from Mr. C. Mureland, publisher, Irvine. The situation of the town is dry and healthy, being altogether of a sandy bottom. All the streets are broad and airy. The old steeple, with court house, council chambers and gaoil, that occupied the centre of the main street, have been removed, and a structure, from a beautiful design erected. The parish church is a handsome building of large dimensions, with a spire and clock, and stands on rising ground, in the centre of the churchyard. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two for United Presbyterians, one for Roman Catholics, and one for Baptists, all situated in the burgh proper. At the north end of the town an academy, surrounded by extensive play-grounds, was erected in 1814, at an expense of £2,250 of which sum the burgh paid £1,633, and the remainder was made up by public subscription. In this institution, which is an honour and ornament to Irvine, there are three principal masters, by whom are taught Latin, Greek, the modern languages, mathematics, drawing, besides the usual branches of education. Many valuable prizes are awarded at the annual examinations; and recently the sum of £1,000 was left to this institution by John Ferguson, Esq., of Cairnbrook, the interest of which is proposed to be given annually in bursaries, at the disposal of his trustees. The pupils attending this academy have been particularly successful in carrying off the first bursaries and prizes at Glasgow College. Besides private ladies' seminaries of a superior class, there are the public and industrial schools and Board schools. There is also a literary and social institute, well provided with reading and recreation rooms, and a large hall for public meetings or entertainments. The Templars' Hall here is the first erection of the kind in Scotland; there is also an Orange and Protestant Hall. The other principal buildings are the Royal, Clydesdale, and Union Banks, all handsome architectural buildings. The grain stores of A. Longmuir & Co. are extensive and substantial structures, and are, perhaps, the largest in Cunningham. Coal pits have been successfully sunk in the burgh land. On the south side of the river, but connected with the town by a fine stone bridge of four arches, is an extensive suburb called EUGLINTON, but in the parish of Dundonald. It abuts on the Frith of Clyde, and includes the harbour and quay, and contains a ship-building yard, three steam saw mills, naphtha works, two iron forges, and two large engineering and foundry yards. Four large chemical and chlorine works have been erected near the beach, which give employment to nearly 1,000 men. The British Dynamite Company have also erected works on the north side of the river. The harbour has recently been much improved, at very considerable expense, and the trade has in consequence greatly increased, especially in the export of coal. The churches are the Free church and the Established church (quoad sacra.)

Irvine is a burgh of great antiquity; the beginning of Irvine is the very beginning of history. Before Robert the Bruce was, before Sir William Wallace was, during the time of William the Lion, it is supposed there was a "town" called Irvine. The earliest mention of Irvine is contained in the account of a dispute between Sir Ralph de Eglinton and the town of Irvine, and somewhere towards the close of the twelfth century a charter was given to it. During the time of Alexander II. a charter existed, which was confirmed by Robert the Bruce. From another similar document it appears the burgesses were in possession of the entire barony of Cunningham and Lays. The first great event in the history was the foundation of the convent or monastery of the Carmelites, about 1300. The sect of the Buchanites had also its origin in Irvine; and it is recorded that in the month of March, 1640, there were twelve women executed in Irvine for the crime of witchcraft, and fifty years afterwards one woman was severely punished for acting as a spaw-wife for the recovery of stolen goods. From 1618 to 1640 Irvine was the scene of the labours of David Dickson, the minister who connected Glasgow with Irvine, eminent as a divine, and author of a poem that moved life in the memory of religious men. Irvine is also the birth-place of James Montgomery, author of the "World before the Flood," &c. but more widely known as the author of the hymn commencing "Prayer is the souls sincere desire." He was born 4th November, 1771, in a little back dwelling still standing in the street leading to the railway station. In 1841 he visited his birthplace and was received with every mark of respect. In this town Burns, Scotland's national poet, served his time as a flax dresser, and the house in which he wrote and was burnt out of is still pointed out to strangers. The Burns Club of Irvine possesses the most valuable of his manuscripts, from which the first edition of his poems was printed, namely, "The Cotter's Saturday Night," "The Holy Fair," "The Two Dogs," &c. John Gault, author of the "Annals of the Parish," &c. was born at Irvine, on 2nd of May, 1779, the house then occupied by his father's family was taken down in 1858, and the office of the Union Bank erected on its site; a neat tablet in the Bank office commemorates this circumstance. Here was invented the screw propeller so early as 1824 or 1825, by Messrs. W. McCrick, Maxwell Dick, and James Steadman. Population of the town in 1871, 6,886, and in 1881, 8,508.

DREGHORN is a parish in Cunninghame district, situated about 2 miles N. of Irvine, on the rivers Irvine and Annock, and is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway. The parish, which is about nine miles in length, and extends from one to three in breadth, contains an Established and a Free church and a Board school. Population of parish in 1871, 3,241, of the village, 821.

KILBIRNIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILBIRNIE, or KILBIENY, is a populous village in that parish, district of Cunningham, 64 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 20 s.s.w. of Glasgow, the like distance n. of Ayr, and 3 from Beith; eligibly situated on the banks of the Garnock, in the heart of a fine country and within a mile of the loch of Kilbirny, which extends two miles in length by half a mile in breadth. The importance of this village has been greatly augmented by the establishment of three extensive mills for the spinning of flax and the manufacture of linen thread, worked by the Messrs. W. & J. Knox. Branches of the British Linen Co. and the Clydesdale Banking Co. are established here. Glengarnock Iron Works is an extensive concern, for the manufacture of pig iron, situated about a mile and a quarter to the south-east of Kilbirnie. These works, which employ about two thousand persons, including those engaged in raising coal for the use of the furnaces, are superintended by Mr. Archibald Gray, the acting manager. The workmen inhabit a newly erected village, and are conveniently supplied with the necessaries required from a store, at market prices. A large number of hands are also employed at the factory of Messrs. Paton, Brown & Co. near to the Kilbirnie Railway station.

tion, manufacturers of wineys, flannel shirtings, skirtings, &c., Kilbirnie is also noted for its manufacture of fishing nets, by machinery, five firms being now engaged in this trade. There are also two rope works.

The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as the most stately, ruins in Ayrshire; it is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I., David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion; they held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunningham. There likewise exist the extensive ruins of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawford, of Kilbirnie. At the present time, the estates of Kilbirnie are possessed by the Earl of Glasgow. Congregations of the Established church, Free church, United Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic, have their respective temples for worship. The parish of Kilbirnie comprises 10,355 acres, and had, in 1871, a population of 4,953 persons; and in 1881, 5,243; of this number the village contained 3,405.

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CROOKEDHOLM, RICCARTON, HURLFORD, KILMAURS, FENWICK, ROSE FENWICK, CRAIGIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMARNOCK is a large and important manufacturing town in the parish of that name, and district of Cunningham, 65½ miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Glasgow), 21 s.w. from Glasgow, 12 n. by E. from Ayr, and between 6 and 7 E. by N. from Irvine; situated on level ground near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The advantages of the place as a site for manufactures were the presence of coal, healthiness of situation, a populous country around, and abundance of provisions. For many years and generations, however, it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of broad flat bonnets, so long the characteristic wear of the Scottish lowland peasantry, as also the striped cowls, which yet bear the name of the town. As this business increased the population augmented, and in the year 1731 the number had swelled so much that the parish church was found inadequate for its accommodation, and an additional one was erected. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent. The leading kinds are two-ply, three-ply and Brussels. A Kilmarnock mechanic had the honour of being the discoverer of the three-ply carpets; they excel the two-ply in design, colour, and durability. Steam is now used by two firms for the weaving of two-ply and Brussels. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation. Formerly skin works and tanneries were common in Kilmarnock, but at the present time there is only one of each. Of late years an extensive trade in tweeds and winceys has been developed, there being many mills engaged in these branches, some of them — as the Elmsley and Irvine Bank Mills — employing a large number of hands. All kinds are made, from the coarsest to the finest. Latterly steam power has been used in the production of Scotch caps, chiefly glegaries. The iron trade may now be said to be the staple trade of the town, and there are many large machine making and iron founding establishments. The most extensive of these are the Caledonian Works, carried on by Messrs. Andrew Barclay & Son; the Glenfield, belonging to a company; the Vulcan, Messrs. McCulloch; the Townholm, Messrs. Grant, Ritchie & Co.; the River Bank, Messrs. Barclays & Co., and others; the Townholm Forge, carried on by Messrs. Reid & Company, is famous for the size and excellence of its forgings. The works are all carried on in a highly spirited and scientific manner. The wages paid in this branch of manufacture alone amounts to several thousand pounds weekly. The making and printing of slawls, or calico work, was formerly the most important department of manufacture. It has now almost disappeared, and there are now only two small works engaged in it. A power-loom cotton factory, the Nursery Mills, has been in operation for some years, and employs several hundred hands, chiefly females. There is also an establishment for the manufacture of a new kind of water meter, a patented article, invented by an ingenious townsman, Mr. Thomas Kennedy. The importance of Kilmarnock has been much increased by a large engineering establishment in connection with the Glasgow and South-Western railway, for the manufacture and repair of locomotive engines, carriages & other apparatus. The banking establishments are, branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Banking Company, and the British Linen Company, together with a Local Bank for Farmers, apart from the one in connection with the Post Office. Surrounding the town are extensive coal fields, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies transmitted continually by railway to Andros-son, Ayr, Troon and Irvine, where it is shipped to various places. There are five incorporated trades, namely, the bonnet makers, skimmers, tailors, shoemakers and weavers; the first named is the most ancient, having been incorporated in 1646.

The civil government is vested in a provost, six bailies, and eighteen councillors. The magistrates preside in the civil and criminal court by turns, and the justices sit monthly in what is called the small debts court. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew and Rutherglen in returning one member to Parliament. Lady Herriot Scott Benthick and the Duke of Portland are the principal owners of Kilmarnock and its neighbouring lands. The aspect of the town is agreeable, especially in the central part. Few towns can boast of a larger and finer cross, where no fewer than seven streets converge. The streets are regularly laid out and the greater part of the houses are built of free-stone. The shops in the principal streets are remarkably handsome and tastefully fitted up. The opening up of such new streets as John Finnie street, in which is the new and commodious post office, Duke street and John Dickie street, and the removal of such old parts as the Strand and College wynd, have done much to improve the general appearance of the town as well as to promote sanitary purposes. The suburbs on the east, south and west sides contain many handsome villas, occupied by business men or retired merchants. The Town House, built in 1805, contains a court room for the magistracy, and public offices. In 1814 a commodious newsroom was erected in the centre of the town, but is not now in existence. The new court-house in St. Marnock street, erected in 1832, is an elegant structure, attached to which are the sheriff's chambers and the offices of the procurator fiscal, and in the same locality a gaol has been built. The Corn Exchange buildings comprise a large public hall, of much convenience and beauty, which, with a large number of public offices, were erected by an influential joint-stock company, under the auspices of the Town Council, and form an architectural ornament to the town. Among the public buildings may be classed the Operetta House in John Finnie street. The design is Italian and it has accommodation for 1,500 persons; it was erected by a joint-stock company, and cost 27,000. At the junction of John Finnie and John Dickie streets are a handsome range of buildings belonging to and occupied by the Kilmarnock Co-operative Society, and built at a cost of 26,000. The Kilmarnock Academy is a handsome and commodious structure, worthy of the town and highly creditable to the architect, Mr. William Railton. It is situated in North Hamilton street, and occupies a square plot of ground, about an acre in extent. It is built of red sandstone, in the Gothic style of architecture of the Elizabethan period, and is designed to accommodate 600 pupils, boys and girls, where they are taught various branches of education by able masters. It was erected by the burgh School Board at a cost of 25,000, and was opened in June, 1876. There are also two well-built and commodious elementary schools in High street and Lew Glen-cain street, also erected by the School Board. What was formerly the Free school has been converted by the Board into a Grammar school, and the Female Industrial School is now an elementary school of the Board. Besides these there are several private schools of a high character. In addition to these are Kay's Endowed schools, in Wellington street and Benthick street, founded by Alexander Kay, a native of Kilmarnock, who left the sum of 26,000 for the building and endowment of these schools. The institutions likewise comprise some well conducted societies. The most important is the Kilmarnock Library, founded in 1797 by a few of the wealthy inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood. In 1811 it consisted of 840 volumes. At present, including the Shaw and Philosophical Libraries now amalgamated with it, there are 6,500 separate works, with upwards of 13,000 volumes. By bequest from the late Mr. Crawford, bookseller, a free income of fully £100 annually has become available for the purchase of books, and that alone. The Philosophical Society was formed in 1828, for the promotion of general and specially scientific knowledge. The Kilmarnock Athenaeum was instituted in 1848, for promoting the social and intellectual improvement of the inhabitants, by providing a first class reading room, the maintaining of a library, and adopting such other means as are usually employed by similar institutions. The reading room of this association, largely supplied with newspapers, magazines and other periodicals, has always been popular. The library soon became extensive and valuable, and is now amalgamated with the Kilmarnock library. The rooms in which the business of these three important societies are carried on form part of the New Corn Exchange buildings. Another institution worthy of notice is the Kilmarnock Philharmonic Society. It consists of fully a hundred ladies and gentlemen, and every facility is given for the admission of others possessing the necessary capabilities. Besides these institutions, there are in the town three masonic lodges, a society of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, one of the Free Foresters, and one of the Free Gardeners. A great object of interest in this town is the observatory, erected in 1818, by the late Mr. Thomas Morton, at an expense of £1,000. The observatory, which is 70 feet in height, and furnished with valuable telescopes and other apparatus, stands on a fine site, and commands a delightful view of the surrounding country as far as the Firth of Clyde. Mr. Morton obtained considerable celebrity for his mechanical genius, and received various honourable testimonials from his countrymen and the Board of Trade, and in 1835 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1847 was erected in the market cross a very handsome monument to the memory of Sir James Shaw, Bart., late Lord Mayor of London, who was a native of Mosshead, in this neighbourhood, where he was born in 1774, and died on the 22nd October, 1843. The statue of the deceased is eight feet in height, mounted on a pedestal of the same altitude. The former, which is cut out of a solid block of marble, weighing ten tons, represents him in his civic decoration as lord mayor, and is altogether a very fine production of art.

The Kay Park owes its existence to the late Alexander Kay, insurance broker, Glasgow, a native of Kilmarnock and who died in January, 1866. By his will, he bequeathed £6,000 for the building and endowment of two elementary schools for the children of industrious poor, he left £10,000 to purchase ground for a public park and maintain the same. After several attempts to obtain suitable ground, the trustees gave up their endeavours and the money was allowed to accumulate. In 1878 the late Duke of Portland intimated his willingness to deal with the trustees for the purchase of ground for a public park, whose capital was then about £13,000. After negotiations, the present site of the park was fixed, and consists of nearly forty acres. The cost of the ground alone was £9,000. It includes the Clerk's Holm, and stretches from Braehead House to the Townhead bridge, and from the river on the west to Grassyards on the east. Nearly a fourth of it is reserved as feuing ground. A large portion of the money was spent in laying out the park and forming drives and walks, so that when the trustees handed it over to the council little more than £1,000 remained as a fund to maintain it. In the centre of the Clerk's Holm is an ornamental fountain, the gift of the late Mrs. Crook, and which cost £800. In the same place a band-stand has been erected for music on Saturday afternoons. On August 9th, 1879, it was publicly handed over to the council, in behoof of the town, by the trustees, the council undertaking, if necessary, to provide £100 yearly. In connection with Kay Park may be noticed the Burns Monument, said to be one of the finest to the memory of the Bard in Scotland. The monument was originated at the public anniversary of Burns, held on January 26th, 1877, when a proposal to erect a statue in honour of the poet was agreed to, and a committee appointed to carry out the project. In a short time £1,000 was subscribed, and this before long was doubled. Instead of a simple statue the committee found they could erect a monument and statue therein. By the kindness of the Kay Trustees a site for the monument was granted in a most eligible situation in the Park. The erection is in the Scottish baronial style, from a design by Mr. Ingram, architect, Kilmarnock, and has a height of 80 feet. It overlooks the entire town, and commands one of the finest possible views. The memorial stone was laid with masonic honours on September 14th, 1878, and on August 9th, 1879, the whole was completed. The statue, which is of Sicilian marble, was executed by Mr. W. G. Stevenson, Edinburgh, and cost £800. It is reckoned an excellent likeness of the poet. R. W. Cochran-Patrick, Esq., M.P. for North Ayrshire, laid the memorial stone, and Colonel C. Alexander, M.P. for South Ayrshire, unveiled the statue, which is placed in an alcove at the top of the entrance stair. The entire cost of the building and statue was about £2,700, the whole being raised by subscription, and both were handed over to the council of the community free of debt. Part of the building is used as a Burns' and Archæological Museum.

The Buchanan bequest will be the most important charitable institution when it comes fully in operation. In 1875 the last survivor of the Misses Buchanan, of Bellfield, died, and according to settlement made by the three sisters the estate of Bellfield and mansion was gifted to the town of Kilmarnock and the village of Riccarton, close to which the estate, which consists of 240 acres, is situated. Part of the trust came into operation at the death of Miss Buchanan, but the main portion does not come into force till 1885. The following digest of the trust deed fully explains its nature. The lands and estate of Bellfield and the minerals are to be held by trustees till Martinmas, 1885, and the trust called the Buchanan Bequest. The annual proceeds are to defray expenses of the bequest, to pay yearly at Martinmas, £5 to Ragged schools; £3 to the Kilmarnock Infirmary; £10 to the parish minister of Riccarton, to be expended on flannel for deserving poor; £130 yearly as salary to a missionary for Riccarton parish, and the balance of the yearly rents from lands and minerals to accumulate. As soon as convenient, part of the mansion is to be fitted up as a library, and open for consultation and reference only to the public of Kilmarnock and Riccarton, and the gardens and policies to be open for recreation. Out of the accumulated funds, and before ten years, the rest of the mansion to be fitted up as an asylum for aged and infirm people, not on the poor roll, who are to be sixty years old and upwards, or younger if rendered unable by accident to provide for themselves, and resident for ten years in Kilmarnock or Riccarton parish. The inmates are to be clothed and fed, and all charges paid out of the rents; but a sum must be available yearly for equal division between Kilmarnock and Riccarton for charitable purposes. The trustees have power to abandon the asylum part of the bequest, should they think the revenues not sufficient. At the end of ten years all the estate and lands are to be transferred to the provost and magistrates of Kilmarnock, the Established Church clergymen of the town, and the minister of Riccarton, who shall thereafter administer the trust, and shall be the trustees. The mansion and grounds have been open to the public since shortly after the bequest, except on Sundays. The minerals have been let, and are being worked, and the funds have been accumulating. It is calculated that from ten to twenty aged persons will find refuge in the house, should it be opened. The library contains 1,500 volumes. The place is much visited during summer.

The civil parish of Kilmarnock consists ecclesiastically of four parishes, the Low, the High, St. Markock's and St. Andrew's, each containing an Established church. Part of the original or Low church is of great antiquity. The church of St. Markock, erected at a cost of £5,000, is a large handsome edifice, seated for 1,700 persons, and ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower. The Free Church has five places of worship in the town, and a sixth in the village of Crookredholm, in the parish. The United Presbyterians have also four churches in the town. Their church in King street, erected as a relief church, is very neatly designed, and has a singularly elegant spire, forming a conspicuous object in the scenery of the town. There are also chapels for the Original Seceders, the Evangelical Union, the Scottish Episcopalians and the Roman Catholics, besides places of worship for other religious denominations. The oldest churchyard and that of St. Andrew's are now closed, but a public cemetery, covering seven acres of ground, was opened in 1875.

The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean Castle, formerly the property of the Boyds, Earls of Kilmarnock. It stands in a "dean," or hollow, less than a mile north from the town. It was burnt down in 1785. When in a perfect state it was considered capable of sustaining a long siege, as, according to tradition, it had the means of drawing secret supplies through subterranean ways that communicated with Crawfordland Castle, two miles distant. A portion of this castle dates 1066, and is still inhabited. Kilmarnock House, another edifice once belonging to and the last residence of that noble family, is situated in St. Markock street. From this house proceeded the last unfortunate earl, in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. This building is now occupied as an industrial school. About three miles from the town, beautifully situated on the Carmel, is Rowallan Castle, which is of considerable antiquity, though the oldest portions are greatly decayed. It was the seat of the barons of Rowallan, and is famous as being the birthplace of Elizabeth More, or Mare, the first wife of Robert the Second of Scotland, who lived and died, tradition says, at Dundonald Castle. The Rowallan estate has passed by marriage into the Hastings, or Loudoun, family, whose residence is near Galston. Among the residences of the gentry may be named The Mount, the property of Lady Oranmore, Caprington Castle, Annanhill House, and others. The Fever Hospital and Dispensary, a stone building, situated on an elevated site, was opened in 1868, the cost of its erection being £4,146.

The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption, including grain and cattle. Fairs are held for cattle the second Tuesday in May, last Thursday in July (commonly called the "gooseberry fair"), and the last Thursday in October, for horses. The cheese show and fair, held at the end of October, is affirmed to be the largest in the kingdom, and is attended by dealers from all parts of the country. It was calculated that at the last show and fair (1881), nearly 10,000 tons of cheese were represented at it. The October show is purely an agricultural one. About the middle of April a large show of cattle has been held for years. It ranks next to the great Ayr show. The acreage of the parish of Kilmarnock is about 9,444. As showing the progress of the town, it may be mentioned that in 1801 the population of the parish was 8,079, and in 1871, 24,071. The burgh proper in that year numbered 21,073, and the parliamentary burgh 22,952. The population of the burgh in 1881 numbered 24,977. In 1880 the total valuation of the burgh, including railways and Riccarton, was £38,782. The parliamentary constituency in the same year was 3,318, and the municipal, 3,464.

The parish of RICCARTON is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river which separates it from Kilmarnock. It contains about 7,500 acres. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length by between two and three in breadth, and includes the village of HURLFORD, at which latter place is situated the extensive works of the Eglinton Iron Co., a large manufactory for fire clay articles, and several extensive collieries. A very handsome Established church and a Free church have also been erected in the immediate neighbourhood, but in Kilmarnock parish, and a large subscription school was built for the education of the children of the working class, but is now one of the public schools of the parish. The village of Riccarton is remarkable for having been the residence of the venerable Sir Rowland Crawford, the maternal uncle of Wallace, with whom, it is said, the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. On avenging the treacherous murder of his uncle and other chieftains, by burning the barns of Ayr, he took his way by night to this village, accompanied by a few followers. When he reached a certain eminence, about six miles from Ayr, he turned round, and seeing the flames still ascending, exclaimed with stern exultation, "the barns burn well!" From this laconic expression (tradition adds), the spot obtained the name of "Burn-well," which it still retains. The church of Riccarton is a modern structure having been erected in 1823; it has a fine lofty steeple, and, from its elevated position, has an ornamental effect on the country round. An excellent bridge across the Irvine materially improves the approach from Ayr to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish. The Duke of Portland is the principal landed proprietor. In 1871 the quoad sacra parish contained 5,845 persons.

KILMAURS is a parish in the district of Cunninghame, with an acreage of about 5,940. The town, a small one and burgh of barony, is two miles from Kilmarnock, situated on the right bank of a rivulet called Kilmaurs water, or Carmel water. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James V., at the instance of Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the porteners), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town house, with a steeple and clock. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of clasp-knives or whittles, the sharpness of the edge of which instruments gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison: a man of acute understanding and quickness of action is said to be "as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle." The most prominent trade now is weaving for the Glasgow and Paisley houses. Coals are raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. There is an old pile of buildings near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin, but with respect to its founder, or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculpture, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor, William, the ninth earl. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church, and ample means of education are afforded the children of the inhabitants by the burgh school and a parochial school. The market, which was for a long period held on Thursday, has fallen into disuse; but fairs are still maintained on the 11th of June, and on the third Wednesday in that month, and the 11th of November. Population of the parish in 1871, 8,449; of the village, 1,115.

FENWICK is a parish in the district of Cunninghame, about 9 miles in length by 6 in breadth, containing about 18,161 acres. The Kirk-town is cheerfully situated about 3 miles N. by E. from Kilmarnock, on the banks of the Mehernock stream, on the road to Glasgow. There is another village, sometimes called Rose Fenwick, on the same road, about a quarter of a mile S. from Kirktown. At a former period the district was a fen or moss, and hence it is supposed to have acquired its name; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater portion of the parish is now under cultivation. Guthrie, a noted champion of the Covenant before and after the reformation, was the first minister of this parish, which till 1622 had formed a part of the parish of Kilmarnock. He was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of "the fool of Fenwick," an appellation which even appeared on the title pages of his published sermons. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for a United Presbyterian congregation. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May and the first Tuesday in November. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,318 of the village, 469.

CRAIGIE is a small village, about 4 miles S. from Kilmarnock, and possesses a church and a school. It is situated on an elevation, about 400 feet above the sea, and commands a pleasant view of the surrounding country and the sea. The parish, which is purely agricultural, is about eight miles in length by two in breadth. Population in 1871, 618.

KILWINNING

Is a parish, post and market town, the former containing 11,069 acres, in the district of Cunninghame. The town, a thriving one and of considerable extent, is 24 miles s.w. from Glasgow, 3 n.w. of Irvine, 4 n.e. of Saltcoats, the same distance s. of Dalry, 10 w.n.w. of Kilmarnock, and 5 from Ardrossan, on the Glasgow and South-Western line of railway. It is situated on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached by excellent roads, passing through a highly cultivated agricultural district. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c., was till lately carried on to an important extent for the Glasgow and Paisley markets. There are large ironworks and considerable coal and fire-clay works in the neighbourhood, and in the town are branches of the Clydesdale Banking Co. Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. Three engineering works, an ironfoundry and a worsted spinning mill are carried on in a spirited manner. The agricultural produce of the parish is considerable, and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. A public park is now (1882) in formation at a cost of £7,000, the gift of the late John M'Gavin, Esq., formerly of this town. Besides the Established and Free churches, there are chapels belonging to the Evangelical Union, Original Seceders, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The only remarkable objects are the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey founded by Hugh de Morville in 1140, and the beautiful tower of the church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance; this tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2,000, raised by subscription, and to which the Earl of Eglinton was a liberal contributor. The present Earl has a fine mansion in the neighbourhood, called Eglinton Castle. In addition to the numerous schools in the neighbourhood, there has recently been erected a very handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, at a cost of £8,700, to accommodate about 800 children. Kilwinning was the first place in Scotland where freemasonry was first established; it was said to have been introduced by the foreign architect who was employed in erecting the abbey. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable for being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and the society at the present day is most respectable. Fairs are held on the first Monday in February and the first Monday in November; and a cattle show in connection with the Farmers' Society is held annually. In 1871 the parish contained a population of 7,975 persons, and the town 8,598; in 1881 the numbers were: for the parish, 7,037; for the town, 8,429.

KIRKMICHAEL AND DALRYMPLE,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CROSS-HILL.

KIRKMICHAEL is a small village and parish, containing about 16,115 acres, in the district of Carrick. The village is 76 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 22 S. from Kilmarnock, 10 S. of Ayr, the same distance E. of Dalnellington, 8 N.E. of Daily, 4 W. by S. from Straiton, and 3 1/2 E. from Maybole, pleasantly situated in a valley, on the road from Newton Stewart to Glasgow, 38 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly—towards the south and east, mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated. The Girvan runs through the parish; the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrook water flows through the village, which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael; the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the churchyard is the tomb of Gilbert M'Adam, who was shot in 1685, by the laird of Culzean and Ballochmyle, for his adherence to the covenanters. The annual fair is held on the Friday before the last Wednesday in September. The Board school was built in 1875, at a cost of £1,100, and accommodates 150 scholars. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,254; of the village, 372.

Cross-Hill is a village in the above parish, on the left Bank of the Girvan about two miles south of Kirkmichael, and is a quoad sacra parish in itself for church and school purposes. There is an Established and Free church here, and also a Board school. Population in 1871, 885.

KIRKOSWALD

Is a parish containing about 15,444 acres, in the district of Carrick; the village, old and picturesque, is 13 miles s. from Ayr and 4½ from Maybole, situated on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow, 90 miles from the former, and 48, by the new road, from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as containing within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and the tourist. The sea coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams that wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the beautiful seat of the Marquis of Ailesa, who is lord of the manor. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens, with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort, mounted with thirteen guns, and a mortar battery, both kept in efficient order. In a low valley, between Kirkoswald and Maybole, are the remains of the abbey of Crossraguell, founded in 1244, by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary; at one period it was possessed by Cistercian monks from Paisley. At the Reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassillis, but it now pertains to Sir James Ferguson, of Kilkerran. A lighthouse has recently been erected upon the site of Turnberry Castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shanter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the hero of Burns' poem "Tam o' Shanter." Population of the parish in 1871, 1,628; and in 1881, 1,540.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE.

LARGS, popularly called the Largs, is a neat town and sea bathing place, in the parish of that name; 70 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 n. from Irvine; charmingly situated on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county, in a remarkably healthy and well-sheltered district, particularly on the north-east, in which direction it is separated from the better cultivated districts by a range of hills: hence a proverbial expression still in use "Out of the world into the Largs." It is now one of the favourite retreats on the western coast for ruralising and bathing, the communication with Glasgow and other large towns on this side of the country being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steamboats, which ply daily on the Clyde; or by rail from Port Glasgow, or Greenock, to Wemyss Bay, thence by boat to Largs, a distance of about six miles from the latter place. A new line of railway is now being formed to connect that at Fairlie, thus making a direct communication, via Ardrossan, to Glasgow. During the summer season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors, for all of whom good accommodation is provided by the inns and private lodging houses. There are some good shops, in which a fair amount of business is transacted in all the various departments of a retail trade, and the monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery. The annual fair, commencing on the first Tuesday in June after the 12th (St. Columbus day), lasting for two days, has latterly fallen away to a mere semblance of its former bustle and activity. At Mackerron place there has recently been erected, at a cost of about £900, by the inhabitants of the town, a very handsome granite fountain as a mark of respect to the late Mr. John Campbell, surgeon, who for 61 years was a resident of the town. The parish church, a handsome structure of stone, with a spire and clock, is a great ornament to the town. There is also a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, an Episcopal church and one for Roman Catholics, while the Brisbane Academy (an endowed establishment) and Board schools afford the inhabitants ample means for educating their families. Few districts possess more romantic scenery; the old castles of Skelmorlie, Knock and Fairlie, with Brisbane House, ornament the parish. It was on the plains of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots under King Alexander III. and the Danes under Haco, King of Norway, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. In the glen near Kelburn is a cascade, which has a fall of fifty feet perpendicular; and various other natural beauties arrest the attention and excite the admiration of the traveller. An aisle in the church, built by Sir Robert Montgomerie, of Skelmorlie, more than two centuries back, has underneath a vault, in which lies the body of Sir Robert, enclosed in a leaden coffin bearing a Latin inscription, signifying "I was dead before myself, I anticipated my proper burial alone of all mortals, following the example of Caesar," alluding, it is said, to Charles V. who, it may be remembered, had his funeral obsequies performed previous to his death. The explanation usually given of this strange affair is that Sir Robert was a very pious man, and was in the habit of making nocturnal descents into the vaults to perform his devotions, thus burying himself alive. Sir James Montgomerie, of Skelmorlie, a subsequent representative of the family, was a distinguished leader among the Scotch Presbyterians at the time of the revolution, but is reported to have afterwards made himself conspicuous by entering into a conspiracy with the ultra-Jacobites, for the restoration of King James. The acreage of the parish is about 22,381, and the population was in 1871, 4,087, and in 1881, 5,137.

FAIRLIE, or Fairley, is a small village in the parish of, and about 2½ miles from, Largs. In the vicinity is Kelburn Castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie Castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburn Castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some very elegant villas, which harmonize with and adorn the prevalent features of the parish; and the marine scenery is truly beautiful and enlivening. There are two places of worship in Fairlie, one an Established church, the other a Free church; likewise a handsome Board school. Considerable business is done here in boat building, being noted for the beauty of build and excellent sailing qualities of the yachts launched from the various yards. Population in 1871, 313; and in 1881, 720, which is included in the above.

MAYBOLE AND THE VILLAGE OF CULROY OR MINISHANT.

MAYBOLE is a small neat market and post town, the capital of its parish in the district of Carrick, 87 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 52 N. by E. from Portpatrick, 44 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 25 N. from Ballantrae, 22 s. by w. from Kilmarnock, 12 N. by E. from Girvan, and 9 s. from Ayr. It lies in a charming part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated, and hill and dale, with a sea-view of "the busy Frith of Clyde," opening on the west. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony in November, 1516, on a grant to Gilbert, Earl of Cassillis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1689, an act, ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole, was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings; several of the dwellings, now inhabited by weavers, bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were, at a distant period, the domiciles of more dignified personages. The mansion house, or castle of the Cassillis family, is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole. It is a stately well-built structure, standing in the centre of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassillis. It is now occupied by Thomas Smith, Esq. factor to the Marquis of Ailsa, who is lord of the manor. The building now used as the town hall belonged to the Kennedys, of Blairquhan. The principal business carried on here is the manufacture of boots and shoes; there are also two works for the manufacture of agricultural implements, and weaving is carried on to some extent for Glasgow houses.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassillis family. The parish church, a quoad sacra, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, an Episcopal church, and Roman Catholic chapel are the places of worship. All the old schools have been done away with, and a fine stone building, two storeys in height, put up in place of them by the School Board, at a cost of upwards of £5,000, and capable of accommodating 650 scholars. There are two other Board schools in the parish—one at Minishant, which is a stone building, with a house for the master adjoining, was built in 1875, for one hundred scholars, at a cost of £1,200; and one at Fisherton, for one hundred scholars, at a cost of £650. The town is governed by the police commissioners. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the Carrick Farmers' Society are held in the town hall; the annual one is on the first Thursday in August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May and November; the quarterly in August merges into the yearly assemblage. A "Knox" club was instituted in 1824, for the purpose of commemorating the zealous exertions of that extraordinary man. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which are the celebrated ruins, called Crossraguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald), and Kilmennie Castle, which was in a similar state of dilapidation, but has of late years undergone repairs; it once belonged to a branch of the Cassillis family, who were for a long time hereditary bailies of Carrick. Ancient coins have been frequently found in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly named "St. Cuthbert's" and "Well Trees"; the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs on the third Thursday in January, April, July and October. The acreage of the parish is about 22,720. The population of the quoad sacra parish in 1871 was 2,701, the town having a population of 8,797.

CULROY or MINISHANT is a small village in the parish of Maybole, three miles and a half from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is five miles and a half distant. A manufactory for woollen goods is established in this village.

MUIRKIRK,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF GLENBUCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MUIRKIRK is a parish containing 80,429 acres in Kyle district. The village, a thriving and considerable one, is 50 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 80 s. from Glasgow, 26 E. by N. from Ayr, 24 s.e. from Kilmarnock, and 16 N.W. from Sanquhar, situated near the right bank of the water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr. Although in a district rude and bleak, the land is being fast reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character; another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture, and in 1835, the black faced sheep fed in this parish carried the Highland Society's prize, and also gained the first prize at the Paris Exhibition in 1862. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been very good to the miner, for coal, iron and limestone are liberally dispensed throughout the territory. At the Eglington Iron Company's works are three blast and several puddling furnaces and rolling mills constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig and malleable iron. Banking accommodation is afforded by a branch of the Clydesdale Banking Co. Limited, under the management of Mr. Jas. Gibson. There are, besides, extensive lime works, belonging to H. Howie Aird, Esq., of Crossflat, and leased by Charles Howatson, Esq., who with James Baird, Esq., of Cambusdoon, the Earl of

Home (of Douglas), and the Honourable Mrs. Macadam Cathcart are the principal proprietors of the land in this parish. The parish is also celebrated for grouse and other shooting. Its length is nine miles by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the south and south-west by Auchinleck, and the west and north-west by Soru and Galston. The places of worship here are an Established church, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians, an Evangelical Union chapel, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Glasgow and South-Western line of railway runs close to the village, at which there is a station. There is a library in the village, which is well conducted. Fairs are held for hiring on the first Tuesday after the 18th February, and the first Thursday after the 18th December, and for cattle, &c., on the second Friday in June. Population of the village, in 1871, 2,376; of the parish, 3,253.

GLENBUCK is a small mining village in the parish of Muirkirk, and situated about three miles N.E. from that town. The works of the Cairntrable Gas Coal Co. Limited, give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. There is a public school, also a railway station on the Caledonian line, about one mile from the village. Population returned with the parish.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a manufacturing town and burgh of barony in the parish of LOUDOUN, district of Cunninghame, 24 miles s. of Glasgow, 18 n.e. of Ayr, 7 e. by s. of Kilmarnock, and 16 n. of Cum- nock, situated on the bank of the river Irvine, about two miles east of the village of GALSTON. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV. in 1490, and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The burghs are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except the court of sessions, and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. There is a police commission for the better regulation and improvement of the town, consisting of seven members—the chief magistrate is the chief commissioner; the Countess of Loudoun is superior of the burgh. The weaving of muslins and lace is carried on here extensively, a large number of hands being employed in this branch of manufacture. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church and a meeting house of the United Secession body. There is a Board School, also one endowed by the late Lady Flora Hastings, and built at a cost of over £6,000; and three Sabbath evening schools—in the latter more than six hundred children of the working classes receive instruction. In the centre of the town is seen the remains of an old castle, said to have been erected as early as that of Edinburgh, but record is silent or obscure concerning its ancient possessors. Within the parish, and about a mile and a half from the town is Loudoun Castle, the elegant seat of Baron Donington; it is large and magnificent, in the castellated or baronial style, standing amidst beautiful woods. Near the mansion is the old parish kirk of Loudoun, bearing the early date of 1015. The only part now standing is that which formed the choir, and is now the place of sepulchre of the noble families of Loudoun and Hastings; and here rest the remains of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings. Fairs are held the fourth Thursday in August and the fourth Wednesday in October. The parish of Loudoun comprises about 15,541 acres; population in 1871, 5,525. The population of Newmilns in the same year was 3,028, part of which is in Galston parish.

DARVEL is a small village in the same parish as Newmilns. In this neighbourhood is Loudoun Castle, before noticed; and the woods and braes of Loudoun furnish a theme for one of Tannahill's best songs. The Marchioness of Hastings benevolently erected a school and formed a cemetery in this village; the school is still maintained by the family. There is also a free school, endowed by the late Alexander Mair, for the education of the children of this village. The Working Men's Institute was erected by Miss Brown, of Lanline, in July, 1870, at a cost of £2,200; it contains a library and reading room, also a room for various kinds of amusements. Population in 1871, 1,712.

OCHILTREE

Is a small but pleasant village, in the parish of that name, district of Kyle, 64 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 n.w. from Dumfries, 37 s. from Glasgow, 28 n. by e. from Girvan, 22 n.w. from Sanquhar, 16 s. from Kilmarnock, the like distance n.e. from Maybole, 11½ e. from Ayr, and 4 from Old Cumnock, situated on the south side of the Lugar water, and on the high road from Ayr to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The country around is delightfully picturesque, and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree House. Ochiltree formerly gave a baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. There is an Established church, a Free church and public school, also a subscription library well selected, and a reading room. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November, for cattle. The acreage of the parish is about 18,422. Population of the village in 1871, 699.

POST OFFICE, OCHILTREE, Janet Weir, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Cumnock) at a quarter after nine morning, and are despatched at three afternoon.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS, a seaport town, is situated partly in the parish of Ardrossan, and partly in the parish of Stevenston; it lies between these towns, and is less than a mile from each, 74 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.s.v. from Glasgow, 19 n. from Ayr, and 14 w. by n. from Kilmarnock. It is a place of great resort for summer residents from all quarters, the accommodation in neat comfortable cottages having been greatly increased in recent years, and the communication by express and ordinary trains offering special facilities for daily travellers in summer. In the beginning of last century a harbour was constructed for the shipment of coal, of which one of the most extensive fields in Scotland lies in this immediate neighbourhood. The first canal made in Scotland was formed here by Mr. Cunningham, for conveyance of coal towards the harbour. The shipping and shipbuilding trade was extensive and flourishing for many years, but on the erection of the extensive iron works at Ardeer, Stevenston, by Messrs. Merry & Cunningham, in 1852, the shipping was for the most part transferred to the commodious harbour and docks of Ardrossan. Saltcoats derived its fame from the cots or cottages occupied by the first inhabitants, who were employed in making salt, in which article there was at one time a very large trade; and it is one of the few if not the only place now in Scotland where there is manufactured that superior marine salt so greatly appreciated for dairy purposes, and which has contributed in some degree to the superiority of the far-famed Dunlop cheese. Though deprived of its former extensive shipping trade, Saltcoats is now a much more flourishing town than it ever was in former days. Its close proximity to Ardrossan, on the one side, with its extensive harbours, docks and public works, the two towns being nearly united, and with Stevenston on the other, where there are the Ardeer Foundry Co.'s extensive works, the Ardeer colliery and a well known quarry, and the opening of the Auchenhavie colliery at the east end of the town, has not only increased the trade of the place, but has also increased the population, and stimulated buildings to a very large extent. In the west end quite a new town of private residences and summer quarters has been built of late. Perhaps no town in the west of Scotland has made more progress in the last twenty years in internal improvements, all the streets having been repaired, some of them more than once; the town has been thoroughly drained by sewers through all the streets, and branch drains to every dwelling-house, accomplished by and at the instance of the two Parochial Boards, who carry out a vigilant sanitary control over the town. At a threatened approach of cholera some years ago, Dr. Littlejohn was appointed by the Board of Supervision to survey the coast towns, and of Saltcoats he says: "I found the town of Saltcoats in an excellent sanitary state. No Scotch town of equal population that I have visited shows so much creditable sanitary improvement, the drainage is complete, the paving is excellent. * * * I cannot conclude without bringing the conduct of the Local Authority of the parish of Ardrossan (Saltcoats) under the favourable consideration of the Board of Supervision." As a result of these sanitary improvements and indicative of the healthfulness of the locality, the death rate has for many years been very low. A justice of peace court is regularly held in the Town Hall on the first Friday of every month. Within the last twenty-five years there has been erected in this place five new churches, and three new manse, beside the Free Church school and other public schools. There is now erected at the north end of the town a handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 600 children, while a considerable endowment has been raised for a fifth by private subscription for the benefit of neglected children. The gas works of the town combine three remarkable features, the cheapest gas, the highest dividend, and the best quality of gas as is maintained in the shire. The townships are lighted by the company free. There are few buildings of note. The Town House was built in 1825, and consists of a spacious hall, with ante-rooms, and is surmounted by a steeple, a prominent object when approaching the town. The Royal Bank of Scotland Limited, and the Bank of Scotland have branches here, and each occupy a handsome building. The Mission Coast Home has been a remarkable success here. This institution, which commenced in a room and kitchen by Mr. James Smith, a devoted missionary, and ably conducted by Mr. William Bryden, now consists of three long buildings, affording accommodation and treatment free to about sixty inmates, each remaining for a short period; and the improvement in health, which is the general result of a short stay in the home, has become so remarkable that there are sometimes hundreds of applicants waiting their turn for admission. The cost is all defrayed by voluntary subscription. Saltcoats is much resorted to for sea bathing, the extensive sandy beach on each side of the town being particularly suitable, the water being considered strong and pure. Salt water baths have been recently erected in connection with the principal hotel, the Saracen's Head. Population of the town in 1871, 4,624, and in 1881, 5,444.

STEVENSTON is a mining village, one mile from Saltcoats, and three from Kilwinning. It derives its name from Stephen or Steven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Morville, a constable of Scotland; the latter, a very celebrated man, died in 1189. Under this grant, Steven settled here, and gave his patronymic designation to the place. The parish abounds in valuable seams of coal. The extensive iron works of Ardeer were erected here by Messrs. Merry & Cuninghame in 1852. The freestone quarry of Ardeer is famous for a superior hard white stone, great quantities of which are exported to the Highlands and Ireland for the finer parts of buildings and monuments. There are very large works for the manufacture of dynamite, in the occupation of Nobel's Explosives Co. Limited. The extensive sands stretching from Saltcoats to Irvine have been frequently suggested as a suitable deposit ground for the sewage of Glasgow. The Established church is a large handsome building, of modern erection, very prominently situated. The old church formerly belonged to the monks of Kilwinning. There is also a Free church. In the centre of the town is erected a handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 650 children. The parish contains 4,268 acres. Population of the whole parish in 1871, 5,015, and in 1881, 5,692.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STEWARTON is a parish of about 13,667 acres, in the district of Cunninghame. The town is 16 miles s. by w. from Glasgow, 8 n. from Irvine, 5 n. from Kilmarnock, and 3 from Fenwick; situated in a pleasant part of the county, on the banks of the water of Annock, close to a station on the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Kilmarnock Joint Railway. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and adorned by several tastefully laid out seats of the gentry. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and obscure village, and it is only of a comparatively recent date that, owing to the general extension of trade and manufactures, it has considerably increased in size. Three woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades. A large portion of the population consists of shoemakers and weavers, who are employed by the Glasgow and Paisley establishments, through resident agents. The staple articles of manufacture, however, are Scotch bonnets and military forage caps, in which branches there are about twenty-three employers. Ample banking accommodation is also afforded the town and neighbourhood by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, having each a branch under able and efficient management. The invention of "portable bee boxes" by a Mr. Kerr, of this town, has proved of great advantage in the management of bees; these boxes are so constructed as to prevent "swarming," and to produce a very superior honey and comb; it obtains a much higher price in the market than any other kind, and is known by the name of "Stewarton honey." District courts are held on the first Thursday of each month, for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop, and Fenwick. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and for United Presbyterians and Independents. There is a handsome Board school erected under the Scotch Education Act, which affords accommodation for about six hundred children. The market is held on Thursday. Fairs are held on the Thursday before the first Friday in January, and on Monday next before the first Thursday in May, for horses, cattle, and farm and dairy produce; and on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October, for the like commodities, and for stock and agricultural and dairy utensils, also for hiring servants. The population of the parish of Stewarton in 1871 was 4,178, that for the town being 3,225.

DUNLOP is a village, two miles and a half from Stewarton, romantically seated on the banks of the Swinsay, about three hundred yards off the road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance, through the trees which embellish it, has an agreeable and retired appearance. The houses being mostly old, and the streets narrow, it does not improve on a nearer view, though in this respect it does not suffer by comparison with other places of similar rank throughout the country. A handsome church, erected in 1835, is ornamental to the neighbourhood: its predecessor having suffered the combined effects of age and weather. In the churchyard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1611, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans Hamilton, who for forty-one years was minister of the parish; it contains a well executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention; a schoolhouse was also built by the same nobleman, in the wall of which is a stone bearing the above date, and an inscription stating amongst other particulars that it was erected and endowed by him "in love of his parish, in King James the Sixth his Reigne"; although in excellent preservation, it has long ceased to be occupied as an educational establishment. The village likewise possesses a Board school, which in architecture might contrast favourably with any in the county. The parish, to which the village gives name, lies principally in the bailiery of Cunninghame, and county of Ayr, but on the north it extends into Renfrewshire. It has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. Several firms are also engaged in ham curing. About the close of the seventeenth century, one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process in this district previous to that period; at present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of "Dunlop," a large quantity being made here annually. There is also a considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village and surrounding territory. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank is established here. Dunlop House, in this parish, is one of the handsomest mansions in the county; on this estate, resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the "O'Grent Stone," supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs for the sale of dairy stock are held, one about the middle of May, the other on the 12th of November, both are generally well attended. In 1871 the parish of Dunlop had a population of 1,160.

WITH THE VILLAGE OF PATNA.

STRAITON is a large parish, of about 52,250 acres, in Carrick district—the village, a neat one, is 80 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 26 s. from Kilmarnock, 11 s.e. from Ayr, the same distance n.e. from Girvan, 7 s.w. from Maybole, the same distance n.e. from Daily, and 6 s.w. from Dalmeilington; finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart, 48 miles s. by w. from the former, and 30 k. from the latter town. The parish, which extends about fifteen miles in length by five in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood and several extensive plantations, and besides the Girvan and lakes it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are for the most part occupied in agricultural pursuits, and some find employment in weaving. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases or urns, containing ashes. The Marquis of Ailsa, the Honble. Mrs. Macadam Cathcart, Sir Jas. Ferguson and Sir Edward Hunter Blair are the proprietors of the land. Straiton has a neat parish church and a Board school. The population in 1871 of the quoad sacra parish was 768.

PATNA is a small village, in the parish of Straiton, situated on the banks of the Doon, which abounds with trout. Lime and coal are obtained plentifully in this neighbourhood, and furnishes employment to many of the villagers. The Duke of Portland is the proprietor of the land about here. The places of worship are the Established and United Presbyterian churches. There is also a Board school to accommodate two hundred scholars, erected in 1876, at a cost of £1,800. Population of the village in 1871, 766.

TARBOLTON is a parish, containing about 12,142 acres, in the district of Kyle; the village, or town, is 12 miles S.E. from Irvine, S.S. from Kilmarnock, and 8 N.E. from Ayr, situated about five miles from the shore of the Frith of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country, and occupying a considerable space of ground. In the reign of the second Charles, it was erected into a burgh of barony, and granted to John Cunningham, Esq., of Enterkine. The parish church is rather an elegant structure, with a beautiful spire, which contains a clock, having four dials; it was completed in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £2,500. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth about four and a half. The Duke of Portland, John Bell, Esq., of Enterkine; Hugh Hamilton, Esq., of Pinnore; Edward Hunter Blair, Esq., of Brownhill; William Orr Paterson, Esq., of Montgomery; John Stirling, Esq., of Whitehaven; William Cooper, Esq., of Failford; William C. Cunningham, Esq., of Afton Lodge, and Thos. Davidson, Esq., of Drumley, are the principal proprietors. The fairs are held on the first Monday in May, the first Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the first Wednesday in November. Population of parish in 1871, 8,219, of which Tarbolton village contained 829.

The village of STAIR, which comprises but a few dwellings and a neat parish church, is about two miles and a half from Tarbolton; its situation is most romantic, and many highly ornamented mansions add to the beauty of the surrounding country. The neighbourhood abounds with mines of coal. The earldom of Stair is now merged in that of Dumfriess.

JOPPA is a village, in the parish of Coylton, about 7 miles S.W. from Tarbolton. The parish, which is adjacent to the west border of Kyle district, is about ten miles in length, by two in breadth, and contains about 11,754 acres. The church, erected in 1883, is a handsome building, with accommodation for a congregation of more than seven hundred persons. Population of parish of Coylton in 1871, 1,440.

The parish of STAIR is in the district of Kyle, lying on the south or right bank of the river Ayr, extending six miles in length by about two in breadth, and contains about 5,449 acres. It was first erected into an independent parish in 1659, when it was severed from Ochiltree for the accommodation of the noble family of Dalrymple, of Stair. Population in 1871, 734.

TROON, DUNDONALD AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving seaport, in the parish of Dundonald, is situated 75 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 31 s.w. from Glasgow, 7 s. from Irvine, and 9 s.w. from Kilmarnock. Under the patronage of the Duke of Portland, this place has advanced steadily to a degree of eminence, and bids fair to become one of the most important seaports on the west coast of Scotland. Possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point, Troon is obviously destined to attain high rank in maritime estimation. It has two superior dry docks for repairing vessels, large storehouses, a light-house, a ship building yard, and a rope and sail manufactory. There are two banking establishments and a reading room, all of which are situated near the harbour. From the extremity of the harbour directly to Kilmarnock, runs a railway, on which immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and from hence shipped for Ireland, France, &c. The town is progressively enlarging, and, in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited in the bathing season by numerous respectable families, for whose accommodation handsome lodging houses have been built. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, and a chapel for United Presbyterians; there are two Board schools, and an auxiliary school. Population of the quoad sacra parish in 1871, 2,870.

DUNDONALD is a parish on the sea coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore, from the water of Irvine towards the south, and containing about 18,405 acres. The village, situated about four miles and a quarter from Troon (which is also in the parish), contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church, together with a public school. Dundonald Castle is a ruin of great celebrity, and occupies an elevated and commanding situation, within two miles of the sea. Population of the parish in 1871, 4,094.

SYMINGTON, parish of about 3,737 acres, is in Kyle district, bounded by Monkton on the south, and Dundonald on the north, the village being about two miles from the latter. It contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church, which has a school in connection; there is also a public school. The lands in this district were held at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stewart, by Symon Lochart, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day. Population in 1871, 810.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE, is a parish of about 11,535 acres in the district of Cunningham; the village is 73 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 24 s.s.w. from Paisley, the like distance N. from Ayr, 23 s. from Greenock, 19 n.w. from Kilmarnock, 12 n.
from Irvine, 7½ s. from Largs, 7 s.w. from Dalry, 5 n. from Saltcoats, 4½ s. from Fairlie, and 4 n.w. from Ardrossan; surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with a few gentle and handsome residences. The ruins of Law Castle and Porton Cross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. The town, or village, seems to be making but very slow progress in the march of improvement. A branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church and a United Presbyterian chapel. There is a handsome Board school, and the village supports a considerable library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Frith of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The new line of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway being opened through to Fairlie, there is now a station here. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity, and it is worthy of remark that off the sea line of the parish, one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms of water; an attempt was made about a century ago to examine the internal condition of this ship, and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her hulk. In 1871 the entire parish of West Kilbride had a population of 1,091 persons, and in 1881, 2,081, the village possessing about half of that number.

POST OFFICE, Main Street, Robert Dunn, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Ardrossan) at twenty-five minutes before eight and a quarter-past ten morning, and are despatched to all parts at five minutes before two and a quarter before five afternoon. Letters on Sunday arrive from all parts at half-past eleven morning, and are despatched at half-past twelve noon.

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern, with a slip or apex inserted between the counties of Moray and Aberdeen. Its extent is fifty miles from north to south, and thirty-two miles from east to west, with an average breadth of twelve, containing 686 miles, or 439,219 acres; it diminishes to an apex at the extreme western end, but the base on the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron for a considerable distance forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie, and some other spots of land, belong to Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE AND CLIMATE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil with few exceptions is deep loam or tenacious clay. The face of the county is agreeably diversified by an intermixture of valleys and flat ground among the ranges of hills, with many beautiful fertile braes, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture. The Strath of Glen-Avon proceeds from the forest of Glen-Avon, in a north-easterly direction, or on the left, and Strath Deveron on the right. Betwixt these is Glen-Livet, from whence, in a north-easterly direction, diverges Glen-Feddick. The principal eminences in the county are—Noath, 1,880; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377; Knockhill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,553; Behrinnies, 2,747; and Cairngorm, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, turnips, potatoes, flax, grass, and in some places a small extent of peas. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county has experienced considerable improvement, in being opened by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county, and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called "Portsoy Marble," as well as a species of granite, which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, marl and slate are also found in various parts. The curing of fish is a branch of some consequence in the towns of Banff, Cullen and Portsoy; and there are distilleries in several of the principal towns. The chief articles of export are black cattle, oats, salted or dried cod, ling, haddock and skate; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron put together are also an article of great consideration; and Banff herring are much in demand in the foreign markets. The imports may be in general comprised under the necessities and luxuries of life, not produced in the county. The climate of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frost and snow frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered but the operations of husbandry are suspended for many of the winter months. The lower part of the shire, from Duff-house to Forglen and Kinnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon Castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing most part of the county in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

RIVERS, RAILWAYS, &c.—The waters of this county are the Spey, the Livet, the Avon, the Feddick, the Deveron, the Isla, the Conglas, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable, but this, as well as the Spey, yields excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance. The Great North of Scotland line gives great facility for railway communication, most of the towns being connected therewith, by being either on the main line or one of its numerous branches.

Banffshire comprehends twenty-eight parishes or parts of parishes, some extending into, and others locally situate in, other counties, and it contains two royal burghs, Banff and Cullen; these are also contributory burghs, or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate. One member represents the shire at large. The present member for the shire is Robert W. Duff, Esq. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, K.T. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 62,028 persons, and by those for 1881, 62,731. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named period was 12,665; uninhabited, 606; in course of erection, 72. The parliamentary constituency in 1881-82 numbered 2,721.

BANFF,

ALVAH, WHITEHILLS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BANFF is a royal burgh, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name, 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 35 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 18 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy, pleasantly situated on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron, and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedom of Boin, whence the name seems to be derived—for in some old charters it is written Boineffe and Baineffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh in 1372, by Robert II., who endowed it with the same privileges, and placed it on the same footing as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and five councillors. Banff and Macduff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, return one member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq. Solicitor General for Scotland.

The town comprises several well-built streets, with handsome shops, and is remarkably clean and neat. From the sea it presents a very interesting appearance, and from any point of view may be regarded as lively and particularly cheerful. The principal street, which is handsome, is ornamented with suitable county buildings and a modern town house, the latter surmounted by an elegant spire. An ornamental drinking fountain, presented by the town of Banff in memory of Walter Biggar, Esq. and Mrs. Anne Duff, his wife, has recently been erected, and adds to the picturesqueness of this part of the burgh. There are also public baths, a museum, and libraries. A social club and newsroom was opened in September, 1881, and receives a fair share of patronage. A newspaper, the Banffshire Journal, with a large circulation, is published in the town. Two railways have their terminus in Banff, one from the south by way of Turriff, the other from the west by Strathisla. The burgh boasts of one of the finest hotels in the north.

The river Deveron, which abounds with salmon, is here crossed by a substantially-constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of MACDUFF. From the bridge a fine view is obtained of Baff House, the seat of the Earl of Fife, rising out of a beautiful park, surrounded by an apparently interminable wilderness of trees, which together are said to comprise a circumference of fourteen miles. The elegant mansion is partly in the Corinthian and partly in the composite style of architecture, and the front is elaborately decorated with sculpture. A wing has been added, at an expense of about £4,000. The interior is replete with curiosities, and embellished with an extensive collection of paintings by the most celebrated foreign and British artists.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, has a greater depth and affords very good shelter. A Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in operation. The port of Banff stands sixth in the list of Scotch ports as regards tonnage of sailing ships. The number of vessels on the register is 138, the aggregate burden of which is 22,698 tons; but a large number of other vessels trade to the port. The chief trade is of an export nature, and comprises salmon, herring and other fish. Some of the largest firms in the herring trade have the chief seat of their business in the burgh, in which there are six branch banks. There is a custom house, and the merchants enjoy the privilege of a bonded warehouse. There is a large distillery, besides a brewery, and an extensive saw-mill. An iron foundry has long been carried on, and does an extensive business. Ship building, rope, and sail making are also carried on to a considerable extent; there is also a tannery, and recently the woollen manufacture has been introduced.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a neat modern erection, with handsome spire; a Free church, and chapels belonging to Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Independents, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Plymouth Brethren. Chalmers' Hospital was founded in 1861, in terms of a bequest by the late Alexander Chalmers, of Clunie, long a merchant in the town of Banff, and is for the support, maintenance, cure, and relief of destitute sick paupers, lunatics, and other diseased and poor infirm persons, of both sexes, born, domiciliated, and resident in any town or parish in the county of Banff; the inhabitants whereof shall make collections at their respective parish churches in aid of the funds of the hospital. It is adapted to accommodate fifty patients, with the requisite buildings for officials and attendants. A permanent revenue for the support of the hospital is derived from the rental of the land of Clunie and Knockorth. The building is situated in the seaview, and is an imposing erection. Banff Academy once stood high as an education institution, but since the Education Act, it has passed into the hands of the School Board; and, independent of other superior scholastic establishments, there are charity schools for children of the humble classes. There are also two boarding establishments for young ladies, so that few burghs offer greater educational facilities. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements in the burgh; but of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of the site. Edward I. visited Banff Castle on Sunday the 22nd July, 1296, after Baliol, King of Scotland had surrendered to Edward, at Montrose on the 7th of July. After he had defeated Wallace at the battle of Falkirk, Edward again marched north and visited Banff Castle a second time, on 4th September, 1298, and the public records shew that it was the last stronghold possessed by the English north of Grampians. The Castle thereafter became a constabulary, the residence of the king's representative or constable, who exercised judicial authority in the county. Dr. James Sharp, the celebrated Archbishop of St. Andrews was born in Banff Castle in May, 1613. The society of the place is polished and agreeable, while the size and position of the town place within reach of the inhabitants all the comforts of a city, with most of the privileges of rural life. The weekly corn and provision markets are held on Friday. Brandon fair on the Friday before the 26th of May, or the 26th if a Friday, and on the Friday before the 22nd of November, or the 22nd if a Friday; the harvest feasting market on the first Friday of August, old style. In 1881, Banff had a population of 4,203, and the parliamentary burgh 6,079 persons.

ALVAH is a parish, 2½ miles S.S.W. of Banff. The river Deveron is here crossed by a bridge, erected by the Earl of Fife. The parish is six miles long and three wide, and is for the most part fertile. There is a church of the Establishment. The hill of Alvah is a conspicuous landmark for this coast. Population of the quoad sacra parish in 1871, 1,682, and in 1881, 1,356.

WHITEHILLS is a village in the parish of Boyndie, 2 miles W.N.W. of Banff, chiefly inhabited by fishermen. The parish, which is five miles long by two wide, contains an Established church, a Free church, lately enlarged, and a Methodist chapel. The interesting ruins of Boyne Castle are also in this parish. Population in 1871, 823, and in 1881, 920.

BUCKIE,

RATHVEN, PORT GORDON, PORTESSIE, ENZIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE, which was established as a fishing village a little more than a century ago, has now grown to be among the largest and most important towns in the county of Banff. Its name, unlike most of the other places in the district, which are of Gaelic derivation, is obviously of German origin, being derived from Bucht—a bay. Situated as it is on the shore of the Moray Firth, its name is accurately descriptive. It is in the parish of Rathven, 20 miles w. from Banff, the county town; 6 miles w. from Cullen, and 7 miles e. from Forchabers. Its population has been increasing steadily every decade; the last census (1881) having registered a total of 4,500. It is, therefore, in point of population, the first town in the county. The town is divided by the burn, Buckie proper, of which the trustees of the late John Gordon, Esq. of Cluny, are the superiors, lying on the east, and Nether Buckie, of which Sir Robert G. Gordon, Bart. of Letterfourie, is superior, on the west of the said burn. The tenure under which property is held is mainly fee right. As might be expected from the origin of the town, and also its natural capabilities, fishing is the principal trade. The Buckie fishing district, comprising the neighbouring stations on the coast, ranks the foremost in the kingdom in respect of the number of boats owned and employed, and also in value. This trade is rapidly increasing. The number of boats is 854, and the value thereof is £63,387; the value of the nets and other material being £78,817. It is possessed of two harbours, the one in Nether Buckie constructed about 20 years ago, at a cost of £18,000. Two-thirds of this amount was contributed by the Board of Fisheries, and the other third by Sir Robert G. Gordon. The other harbour, which was commenced in 1874, and is now approaching completion, was built at the sole expense of the late John Gordon, Esq. of Cluny, at a cost of about £70,000. For depth of water and other capabilities this harbour is allowed to be the finest in all the Moray Firth. It is made of concrete, and is in all respects admirably and strongly constructed. D. Cunningham, Esq., C.E. Dundee, was the engineer. A number of curing stations and other stores have been erected by the Cluny Trustees and are all occupied. There is now a splendid and weekly steamer service from Leith and Aberdeen to Buckie and other Moray Firth ports, which has already developed a good trade. What has retarded this locality very much is the want of railway communication, but there are now good prospects of the railway being extended to Buckie. Approached either by sea or land this town presents an imposing appearance, possessed as it is of such fine ecclesiastical buildings. First and foremost is the Roman Catholic chapel with its two spires, the new Established church with its crowned tower, the Free and Episcopal chapels, both with handsome spires, besides the U.P. church, which is a substantial building. The houses generally are of a good and substantial character, and besides a number of handsome private buildings, the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, Town and County Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank, Limited, occupy respectively first class and modern buildings. The town not being a burgh, nor yet under the Lindsay Act, possesses no corporate body, such as police commissioners; but the sanitary arrangements as regards a supply of water and sewerage, which are under the Public Health Acts—the parochial board being the authority—are admirable. Besides the fish curing trade, there are other industries springing up. There are net and rope manufactories and steam saw mills, and at Inchgowrie is a large distillery. With railway communication and suitable steamer service from the north side of this port, Buckie is destined to become the leading commercial town in the county.

PORT GORDON is a village on the coast, about a mile w. from Buckie. Its inhabitants are exclusively occupied in fishing and the ship coasting trade; they employ stake and bag nets for the capture of salmon, which are here abundant, being in the immediate vicinity of Speymouth. A large quantity of corn was formerly shipped annually from this port. The harbour here is commodious, and the greater part is built of Portland cement concrete, at the sole expense of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. A narrow rivulet separates this village from that of Port TANKACHEY. Population in 1871, 970, and in 1881, 1,182.

PORTESSIE is a small coast village, about a mile e. from Buckie; it is of some consequence as a boat building and fishing station. Population in 1871, 877, and in 1881, 1,061.

The parish of RATHVEN extends about 10 miles along the coast of the Moray Firth, by from 3 to 5 in breadth. The greater portion of the land is hill, moss and moor; but the more level parts near the sea are arable and fertile, being greatly enriched by sea manure; and in some parts the eye is relieved by the appearance of thriving plantations. Throughout the district the supply of limestone, sandstone and slate is abundant, and the memorials of antiquity are numerous, the Danish "cairn" being the most general. The population of the entire parish of Rathven in 1871 was 10,199, and in 1881, 11,140.

ENZIE is a quoad sacra parish, 22 miles w. of Banff. The parish is partly in Rathven and partly in Bellie. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and two Roman Catholic chapels are the places of worship. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,261, and in 1881, 2,108.

CULLEN AND DESKFORD,

AND THE VILLAGES OF PORTKNOCKIE, FINDOCHTY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maritime town, and the capital of the parish of its name, 191 miles N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Forth, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situated on a commanding eminence overlooking the Moray Frith. Until within the last forty years it consisted of three independent and distinct towns—the New Town, near the sea, with a harbour; the Auld Town, more inland, and adjoining to the Parks of Cullen House; and the Fish Town, a low village, exclusively inhabited by fishermen and their families. The Auld Town no longer exists, and the park of the Earl of Seafield occupies its site. To this nobleman the town is indebted for those improvements and modern erections which have conferred upon it that aspect of neatness and respectability so apparent, and raised it to the rank of the third town in the shire. The curing of fish and its exportation is carried on by several of the inhabitants. There are also branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, a large brewery and two good hotels. The acting magistrates are the provost, two bailies, with a treasurer, dean of guild, and nine councillors. A justice of peace small debt court is held the first Tuesday in every month. The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead in returning a member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq., Solicitor-General for Scotland. A very elegant temple of stone was some years since erected upon an elevated spot of ground, very near the sea, and not far from Cullen House. This latter is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls;

POST OFFICE, Grant Street, John Smith, Post Master.—Letters arrive from the South and West at thirty minutes past ten morning and a quarter past four afternoon, and from Banff, Portsoy, &c. at forty five minutes past one afternoon; and are despatched for Portsoy, Banff, &c. at thirty minutes past ten morning, and for the South and West at thirty minutes past one afternoon and ten night.

Letters are despatched, by messenger, to Findochty and Portknockie at eleven morning and half-past three afternoon, and arrive therefrom at two afternoon and half-past seven evening. To Deskford and Grange at seven morning, and arrive therefrom at five evening.

and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of eighty-four feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, Queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence, called Castle Hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength. An almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch. It is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. Fairs are held on the third Friday in May, and the second Friday in November (new style). In 1871, the entire parish of Cullen had a population of 2,215, and in 1881, 2,236, and the town, 2,038.

DESKFORD is a parish, lying between Cullen and Grange, five miles in length by three in breadth. The places of worship are a new parish church and a Free church. New public schools have lately been erected in the village. Population in 1871, 972, and in 1881, 972.

PORTKNOCKIE is a fishing village, within the royalty of Cullen, in the parish of Rathven, 2 miles W.N.W. from Cullen, and 4 miles E. from Portessie. It is situated in Moray Frith, and contains a Free church, a chapel of ease, and a public school. Population in 1871, 1,235, and in 1881, 1,118.

FINDOCHTY is also a small fishing village, in the same parish as Portknockie, 3 miles W. from Cullen. A new harbour is about to be constructed here at a cost of £10,000. The places of worship are a United Presbyterian church and Wesleyan chapel. There is also a public school in the village. Population in 1881, 936.

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH, ABERLOUR,

CHARLESTOWN, CRAIGELLACHIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUFFTOWN is a village and burgh of barony, of modern date (having been erected within the last half century), in the parish of Mortlach; 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 49 N.W. of Aberdeen, 29 S.W. of Banff, 14 N.E. of Inveravon, and 4 S. of Aberlour, situated a short way to the North of the old decayed hamlet of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dullian and the Fiddich waters. The village is rapidly improving in appearance, extent and population, under the auspices of its patrons and owners, the Earl of Fife and the Duke of Richmond. This parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory gained over the Danes by Malcolm II.; and the district possesses the ruins of the castles of Auchindoun and Balvenie, of which Mr. Gordon, in his "Statistica Account of Scotland" says: "When a stranger is travelling through this part of Scotland for curiosity or pleasure, they deserve his attention, and will contribute to his amusement." An extensive trade is carried on by the Tinniver and Richmond Lime Company, and there is a large distillery, of which Mr. George Cowie is the proprietor. Excellent accommodation may be obtained at the Fife Arms, which is also a posting house. The parish church, which is of very ancient date and has lately undergone considerable alteration, is in the immediate vicinity of the village. There are also a Free church, an English church and a neat Roman Catholic chapel. Fairs are held on the last Thursday in every month, excepting April, when one is held on the 15th, and on the first Monday in June. Population in 1881, 3,059.

ABERLOUR is a parish, situated about 4 miles S. of Dufftown, where the river Lough joins the Spey. Benrinnes, 2747 feet above the level of the sea, is in this parish, as is also the pleasant and thriving village of CHARLESTOWN. It contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church. The Aberlour Hotel is an excellent commercial, family and posting establishment. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in April, May and November. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,517.

KEITH.

BOTRIPHNIE, NEWMILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KEITH is a respectable market and post town, and parish—the latter chiefly in the county of Banff, but extending into that of Moray. The town is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 S.W. of Banff, 17 E.S.E. of Elgin, 50 N.E. of Aberdeen, 50 E. of Inverness, 8 S.E. of Forchabers, 17 S.S.W. of Portsoy, and 12 S. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely—Old KEITH, New KEITH, and Fife KEITH—the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new. New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, fenced off in tenements of fifteen yards by sixty; it is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the principal street there are many good shops and hotels. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of six centuries. An extensive manufactory has been erected here by the Messrs. G. & G. Kynoch, for the manufacture of Scotch tweeds, who give employment to a considerable number of hands. In addition there are large flour manufactories, an extensive distillery, and a brewery in the Old Town. Three branches of the respective establishments of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, are in operation here, the latter have also a branch in Fife Keith. On the Caird's Hill, denoting the "hill of friends," are remains of a Druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glangarick, and Peter Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of freebooters, who, after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken prisoner, and his gang destroyed.

The present established church was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodious edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of eighteen hundred, and is considered one of the handsomest churches in the north of Scotland. The Episcopalians, a Free Church community, the United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics have each a place of worship. There is also a public reading room and library, in the former of which the principal daily papers and leading periodicals are taken, while the library contains a number of useful and instructive books; a chess room is attached to the reading room for members. A sheriff court, for small debt and debt recovery cases, and for proofs in ordinary actions and other business, is held once a month in Longmore Hall. The monthly markets are held on the first Friday of every month, the stance for which is at the south end of the town and is of considerable extent. In addition there are three fairs in May and November for the half yearly servants, and in July for harvest servants. The parish, which embraces an area of 13,195 statute acres, contained in 1871 a population of 5,891, of this number 3,802 were returned for the town; in 1881, 6,396 were returned for the parish, and 4,349 for the town.

BOTRIPHNIE, a parish in Banffshire, and the seat of a presbytery, is situated about four miles south of Keith town; it extends across the whole county from Aberdeenshire on the east to Elginshire on the west, having an average breadth of about three miles, and enclosing an area of 9,459 statute acres; the soil for the most part is arable, and generally speaking fertile. Population in 1871, 765, and in 1891, 636.

NEWMILL is a village, in the parish of Keith, and one mile north from that town. It has a United Presbyterian Mission House. Population in 1871, 614, and in 1881, 651.

MACDUFF AND GARDENSTOWN,

IN GAMRIE AND DUBFORD.

MACDUFF is a sea-port town, in the parish of Gamrie, situated about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the sea-shore. This town has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the hutage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and trade. It is built on the property of the Earl of Fife, whose fine seat lies in the neighbourhood; and to this nobleman it has been indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity; through his influence it was created a burgh of barony by George III. in 1783, whose name was altered from Doun to its present appellation; it has from that period increased rapidly in extent and consequence. It contains three churches, Board schools, and a school for poor children of both sexes—the latter, called the "Murray Institution," from its having been founded by a Mr. Murray, of London, a canvas manufacturer, and a native of Macduff, in 1849; there is also a town house and gaol. The church occupies a conspicuous position on the eminence; and Lord Fife has ornamented its precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same nobleman has recently expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour, which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith; as a station of the herring fishery, it is exceedingly valuable, a great supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port. There are two branch banking establishments—the Union, Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. The greater portion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff is exported hence, as are salmon, cod and herring; and the country inland is supplied from here with coal, bone manure, and lime. Several vessels trade with London and the Baltic, the number of fishing boats is very considerable, and in the curing of fish there are some respectable establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and even lucrative employment. The town is governed by a provost, bailies and council. Population in 1881, 3,656.

GARDENSTOWN is also a small seaport village of very romantic appearance in the same parish, eight miles east of Banff, and fourteen west of Fraserburgh; an Established church, and one for the United Presbyterians, together with two schools, are in the village. Population in 1881, about 1,000.

The parish of GAMRIE extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half. The coast is bold and precipitous and indented with caverns. The land is partly under tillage and partly in pasture.

PORTSOY AND FORDYCE.

PORTSOY is a seaport in the parish of Fordyce, 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 82 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E.N.E. of Fochabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff, situated on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the Baron of Boyne, whose descendants, embracing the fortunes of the Pretender in 1715, forfeited their lands to the crown. They were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in the possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but as a port it is in a thriving condition. The point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards of 100 tons burthen; an additional harbour is about to be erected, capable of accommodating vessels of considerably greater tonnage, and an extra number of herring fishing boats. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been greatly extended of late years, it enjoys a considerable trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal; fish curing and a woollen manufactory are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its ports has elevated Portsoy into a position of some consequence as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarries of this district (which has obtained the name of "Portsoy marble") is a beautiful mixture of red, green and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea-cups, vases, and small ornaments, chimney-pieces, &c. Some singular specimens of schistus, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. This district also abounds with excellent limestone. The burgh is under the jurisdiction of a baron bailie and justices of the peace. The Earl of Seafield is superior. The extensive ruins of the old Castles of Boyne and Findlater, lying to the east and west of Portsoy, possess great attractions for the antiquary and pleasure seeker.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, an Episcopal chapel, a United Presbyterian church, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. There is a Young Men's Christian Association in the town, and in connection with it a library has recently been established, which is available to the members free, and to the community at a very low charge. The library contains about 800 volumes, the various departments of literature being well represented. Population in 1881, 2,312.

The parish of FORDYCE is of great antiquity. The village is situated about 3 miles W. by S. from Portsoy, and owns at the present day some celebrity from its educational institutions. Smith's academy is a handsome modern building, in which nine boys are educated and clothed; and large new Board schools are in course of erection, at which there are a number of bursaries in the gift of Lord Seafield, tenable by boys for five years, with four years in addition at Aberdeen University. At what was formerly the old parochial school the late Sir James Clark, Bart., physician in ordinary to Her Majesty, and the late John Forbes, Esq., physician extraordinary to his late Royal Highness the Prince Consort, received the early part of their education. The most remarkable remnant of antiquity in the village is a large castellated building, standing on the east side of the Square, and bearing the date of 1692; it originally belonged to the Durn family, but is now the property of Lord Seafield. Population in 1881, 1,976.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland; it is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk; on the north the range of Lammermuir hills separates it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, having a detached portion of the county of Durham upon its south-eastern limits. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west thirty-five miles, and from north to south twenty-two, and its area comprises 297,161 statute acres, or 464 square miles.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the period of the Roman invasion Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British, called Ottadini; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests of these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and in the course of time they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Sacronia, superseding its previous designation Bernicio. Until the year 1020 this district of country was included within the kingdom of Northumberland; in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II. by Cospatrik, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century, many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears, likewise, that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish and other foreign traders; and it is recorded as a fact, that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom in entering from England, Berwickshire suffered, in the succeeding centuries, in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham and Berwick, and its bridges across the Tweed were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of the town. From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwickshire underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognised in places more distant from the frontier. By their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularized, and in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable bur which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife. The “Men of Merse” distinguished themselves at Flodden and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I. paid his first visit to Scotland, in the year 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, “gallantly arrayed” on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

SURFACE, SOIL, &c.—Berwickshire is divided into three districts, namely, Merse, Lammermoor (or Lammermuir), and Lauderdale. The Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, and occasionally gives name to the whole county; it is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties, and being well enclosed, and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from any of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect, and runs on the northern border of the Merse, so as effectually to divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed; but for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader water, along whose bank it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable; this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres. The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description; those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Soutra Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1,544; Tippet Knows, 1,323; Twin Law, 1,260; and Dirlington Law, 1,145.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Within the last century very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian; the country is thickly but not redundantly populated with a most intelligent active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great and general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised, and freestone and whinstone of various kinds abound in every part of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham, by an easy land carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural. Manufactures as yet have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick, where sackings, sail cloths and ropes are made, and flax dressed and spun. The curing of herrings in this quarter is a somewhat extensive occupation, and it is from hence that large shipments of corn, &c. are made.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences; it is not susceptible of navigation, but is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whiteadder course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eyemouth. The Eden, which runs southwards from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of above forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder that no salmon can live in it; if any happen to enter they are said to die in a few days, though they are caught plentifully in the Whiteadder, which also abounds with trout and whiting, these latter attaining a larger size than the trout; their flesh is red, and in flavour bears a partial affinity to that of salmon. The principal lines of railway in this county are the North British and its many branches, and the North Eastern. The northern extremity of the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway is at Berwick; and here the magnificent Tweed viaduct connects that line with the North British, and forms with other railways an uninterrupted communication from London to Aberdeen.—See the town of BERWICK for a more detailed account of the viaduct.

DIVISION AND REPRESENTATION.—Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes, and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, Lauder. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the Senate) in this county, is Lauder; the others representatively connected with it are Haddington, Dunbar, and North Berwick, in Haddingtonshire, and Jedburgh, in Roxburghshire. Berwick-upon-Tweed is a royal burgh, and sends two members, but is not classed as an integral portion of the county, which sends one for the shire at large. The present member for the county is the Hon. Edward Marjoribanks. The parliamentary constituency for 1831-82 was 1,346. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Home. By the returns presented to Government in 1871, the entire county of Berwick contained a population of 36,488, and by those for 1881, 35,388. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named period was 6,795; uninhabited, 523; in course of erection, 89.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED,

ANCROFT, NORHAM, SCREMERSTON, SPITAL, TWEEDMOUTH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England) is a corporate and parliamentary borough and seaport, 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant S.E. 58 miles (by rail), and from Glasgow E. by S. 103. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Teutonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its establishment is obscure. Matland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note of the same name, in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and town on the continent of America; others, and among them Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Berwicca, signifying "a village belonging to a manor;" while a third party, with more feasibility, derives it from bar and wick, "a castle on the bend of a river," Berwick was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It stands on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that stream empties itself into Berwick bay. Prior to the year 1551 Berwick was alternately in the hands of the English and Scotch, but it was then erected into a free burgh or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom, having a small district attached to it called "Berwick bounds," stretching about three miles north, and the like distance up the Tweed. It may be added that it is described as a large and populous town so early as the reign of David I. of Scotland. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king, Gregory, contemporary with Alfred the Great, took it by assault. Malcolm of Scotland having defeated the Northumbrians in the year 1018, he became possessed of all the Lothians down to the Tweed, after which time, Berwick remained in Scotch hands till 1296, when it was re-taken by Edward I. During this period it rose to be a town of the greatest importance being second only to London. About the year 1618 Berwick was annexed to the see of Durham by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flambert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I. of Scotland who, in 1147, had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland, and as a security he was forced to deliver up the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291 the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I. assembled at Berwick, to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Balliol to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th of November, in the following year, the king appointed John Balliol successor to the crown.

The town is surrounded by regular fortifications, the old line of which extended 2 miles 283 yards; the present walls, built in the time of Queen Elizabeth, are only about one mile and a third in length, and at the present time form an excellent promenade entirely round the town. Berwick was formerly the principal town of the kingdom of Merse; it stands on a gentle declivity at a short distance from the sea; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side. The ancient castle, of which there are only a few remains, must have been of great strength, and is now merely an attractive object to the antiquary.

Berwick, in modern days, is of considerable consequence; it is a regular, well-built town, joined to England by a fine bridge of hewn stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the whole length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width is 17 feet; at each of the pillars, which are fourteen in number, there is an outlet on both sides, for the greater safety of foot passengers, when carriages, &c. are meeting on the bridge; it was commenced in 1610, in the reign of James I., and finished in 1634, in the reign of Charles I., at a cost of £15,000—a heavy sum at that period. About a quarter of a mile higher up the river is the railway viaduct, known as the "Royal Border Bridge," opened by Her Majesty and Prince Albert on the 29th August, 1850. This magnificent structure spans the broad valley of the Tweed, and completes an important link in the chain of railway communication between London and Edinburgh by the east coast. It forms the northern extremity of the North-Eastern Railway; and in magnitude of construction and grandeur of design is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable architectural achievements of modern times. The foundation stone of this noble structure was laid on the 15th of May, 1847, without any public ceremony. The viaduct consists of 28 circular arches, each 61 feet 6 inches span, springing from lofty piers 8 feet 6 inches broad at the narrowest point. One half of the arches span the river—here a broad and beautiful stream—and the remainder are built on the neighbouring land south of the Tweed. The total length of the bridge is 2,160 ft., and its greatest height, from the bed of the river, 126 feet 6 inches, including the parapets; its breadth between the parapets is 24 feet, allowing a double line of rails to be laid. The viaduct is built entirely of stone, with the exception of the inner part of the arches, which is brick laid in cement. There are about one million and a half cubic feet of masonry in the structure, and two million and a half of bricks have been placed in the arches. The greatest depth of the water at high tide is 23 feet. The design of the bridge is elegant, and the parapets are adorned, on the outside by miniature corbelled arches. The piers of the bridge, which are protected by handsome cutwaters, are curved up perpendicularly, and are narrowed near the spring of the arch by means of offsets. The parapets and springs of the arches are of polished stone, but the rest of the masonry is only rough hewn.

The appearance of the arches is extremely graceful. When one-half of the arches had been erected, it was considered desirable for the accommodation of the traffic, to erect a temporary bridge across the river, without waiting the completion of the stone viaduct, so as to avoid the uncertainty of the river operations. The quantity of timber used in the construction of the stone and timber bridges was not less than 300,000 cubic feet. The large embankment at the south end of the bridge, five-eighths of a mile in length, and in some places 60 feet high, completes the junction of the Tweedmouth with the Berwick station. The entire cost of the viaduct, amounting to about £120,000, was borne by the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway Co., now the North-Eastern. The Tweed viaduct is one of the largest stone viaducts in the kingdom. The last arch of this magnificent bridge was keyed on the 26th March, 1850, by the wife of the resident engineer. The country round here is generally flat, but well suited to agricultural purposes, and some fine views are to be obtained in the neighbourhood. The pier is worthy of note; it stretches a great distance into the sea and forms a fine breakwater, the lighthouse being situated at the extreme end; the pier affords a fine and salubrious promenade. The exportation of coal from the mines in the neighbourhood forms an important feature in the commerce of the port, while that of grain, manure, and salmon caught in the Tweed (the latter sent to London market) are nearly equally profitable. The principal fishing stations are from the mouth of the river Norham, a distance of seven miles. The season commences on the 15th of February, and terminates on the 15th October. In Castlegate are the agricultural implement works of Messrs. Brigham & Co. The port enjoys the privilege of the Warehousing Act, passed the 6th of George IV., and is now a bonded port for the reception of timber, wines and colonial produce. Four newspapers are published here, viz.: the Berwick Advertiser and the Berwick Journal, published on Thursday; the Berwickshire News on Tuesday; and the Warder on Tuesday and Friday. There are four branch banks, viz.: Messrs. Woods & Co. and the North-Eastern (late Alnwick and County), in Hide hill; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, at the Bridge end; and the British Linen Co.'s Bank, in Bridge street. The Town Hall, in the High street, is an imposing building of commanding appearance; the spire is 150 feet in height, in which there is a clock and a peal of eight bells; the old custom of ringing the curfew is still continued here, and at eight every evening the curfew is rung at the Town Hall. Another remnant of a bygone age is the old stocks by the side of the town hall steps. The other public erections are the Militia Barracks, the Infirmary, the Union Workhouse, and the Corn Exchange. There are two good hotels—the King's Arms, in Hide hill, and the Red Lion, in High street, both of which are complete and comfortable establishments.

The borough, previous to the operation of the Municipal Reform Act, was governed by a charter granted by James I. The last enactment vested the government in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, with a recorder and the usual assistant officers, under the style of the "Mayor and Burgesses of the Borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed;" the same act divided the borough into three wards, and provided it with a commission of the peace—the mayor and bailiffs have the authority of sheriffs, and aldermen who have served the office of mayor are magistrates for life. Sessions are held quarterly, presided over by the Recorder of Berwick, W. T. Greenhow, Esq.; the mayor and bailiffs, as lords of the manor, hold courts leet and baron twice in the year; and Berwick is included in the first circuit of county court towns under the acts for the recovery of debts not exceeding £50. The limits of the borough are defined by the Boundary Act to comprise the parish of Berwick and the respective townships of Tweedmouth and Spital; the same act appoints Berwick one of the polling stations at the election of representatives for the northern division of the county of Northumberland. The borough was first represented in the English Parliament in the reign of Henry VIII., since which time it has continued to send two members, the present members being Herbert E. H. Jermingham, Esq. (Liberal), and Colonel Milne Home (Conservative). There is a large public cemetery belonging to the Corporation in the North road.

The parish church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a flat-roofed Gothic pile, begun in 1643, and finished in 1653; from being destitute of either tower or spire it has a rather singular appearance, but in the days of the commonwealth these were deemed unnecessary ornaments. The benefice is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The tombstones in the church yard, from their great number, strike the stranger with surprise. Since the cemetery was opened, it is only in rare cases that interments are allowed in the church yard now. St. Mary's church, Castlegate, is a neat stone edifice, erected in 1853, at the expense of the late Captain George Gordon. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The other places of worship consist of one church in connection with the church of Scotland; three churches of the Presbyterian Church of England, the church in Wallace green being a very fine building, built at an expense of nearly £6,000; one United Presbyterian church, a Wesleyan, a Primitive Methodist, and a Baptist chapel and the Roman Catholic chapel. The educational establishments of Berwick are the Grammar school, the Corporation Academy (for the children of freemen solely, the salaries of the rector and teacher and all other expenses being paid by the corporation), two National schools for boys and one for girls, and one for infants, a British mixed school and a Roman Catholic school; besides these there are several private schools.

The weekly market is on Saturday, and one for fat cattle every alternate Monday. A fair is held on the last Friday in May for horses and cattle; and there are statutes or "hirings" for ser-wants on the first Saturdays in March and May. The population of the municipal and parliamentary borough and local board district, the boundaries of which are co-extensive, was in 1871, 13,282, and in 1881, 13,995, showing an increase in the ten years of 713.

TWEEDMOUTH is a populous parish, now forming a part of the borough of Berwick. It is situated at the south end of the bridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. The North-Eastern station is situated at the eastern end of the town. The inhabitants are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and the other branches of trade, exports and imports, are of the like nature with those in Berwick. There are several agricultural implement manufactories, among which are the extensive works of Messrs. William Elder; John W. Logan; Brigham & Co.; M. Thompson, &c., an iron foundry, and two boiler manufactories. The corporation of Berwick are lords of the manor of Tweedmouth. There is a large public cemetery here. A new dock was opened on the 4th October, 1876; it admits vessels up to 500 tons burden, and has an area of $3\frac{1}{4}$ acres, and a depth of 21 feet; sixteen of the ordinary class of vessels trading with the port can anchor in it at one time: the cost of construction was about £35,000. There is now railway communication from Tweedmouth station to the dock, by the North-Eastern Railway Co. The places of worship are the parish church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew (the living of which is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham), an English Presbyterian chapel, and one connected with the church of Scotland. Population in 1871, 5,226.

SPITTAL, a populous village in the parish of Tweedmouth, about three-quarters of a mile from Berwick, and comprised in that parliamentary borough, is situated at the mouth of the river. The curing of herrings is carried on here extensively, and there is a manufactory of spades and shovels, also several chemical and manure works, among which are the extensive works of Messrs. Crossman & Paulin, Messrs. Johnson & Co., The Rivermouth Chemical Co. and Messrs. J. Clay & Son; the gas works for the borough are situate here. Many good houses have been built for the accommodation of visitors, who resort hither for sea-bathing. There is also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain iron, lime, magnesia, and sulphate of soda. The places of worship are an Established Church of England, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; a Presbyterian Church of England, and a Baptist chapel. There are also a British school and a National school. EAST AND WEST ORD are hamlets in the parish of Tweedmouth.

ANCROFT is a village and parish in the county of Northumberland, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles s.w. from Berwick. The village of Ancroft (or St. Ann's Croft, as it was formerly called) was at one time of much greater extent, but being visited by the plague in 1666, it was destroyed by fire, by order of the Government; the foundations of many houses are found in the adjacent fields. The church of St. Ann (from which the place derives its name) is a very ancient edifice, and was originally founded in 1092. It was, in the time of the Edwards, converted into a Peel tower for the protection of the inhabitants against the Scotch. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham; there is also a place of worship for English Presbyterians. There is a National school and a Presbyterian school at Ancroft Moor. CHESWICK is a hamlet in this parish. Population in 1871, 1,991.

SCREMERSTON is a scattered village in the county of Northumberland, 3 miles s. from Berwick, its post town. Here are the extensive collieries, lime and brickworks of the Scremerston and Shoreswood Coal Co. There is an Established church, dedicated to St. Peter, and a National school here.

NORHAM is a populous village in the parish of its name, in the county of Northumberland, situate seven miles and a half w. from Berwick. It consists chiefly of one long wide street, with a green in its centre, on which stands a cross. The houses are well built and very respectable, and the land around is very productive and well cultivated. There is a station on the Kelso branch of the North Eastern Railway about three-quarters of a mile from the village, and also a station at Velvet Hall on the same branch, for the convenience of the district; it is situate about midway between Berwick and Norham. A bridge crossing the Tweed connects it with Berwickshire, and at Horncliffe it is also connected by a very neat suspension bridge. The ancient castle of Norham stands on an eminence a short distance from the village; the extent of the ruins shows that the fortress had formerly been of great strength and importance. The tower is still standing, though much dilapidated, and consists of four storeys, 70 feet high, with many vaults or prisons, which are yet entire. The grounds surrounding it are now cultivated as a market garden. The present proprietor, the Hon. Mr. Jerminham, has had the ruins repaired, with a view of preserving them. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is very ancient, the original one being built in 840; the middle aisle is the only portion of that remaining; this church had anciently the privilege of sanctuary for thirty-seven days. The living is a vicarage in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. There are also places of worship for the Free Church and Presbyterians. There is a National school in the village. FELKINGTON, GRINDON, HORNCLEIFFE, LOAN END, LONGRIDGE, NORHAM MAINS, SHORESWOOD, THORNTON and TWIZEL are townships in this parish. In 1871 the parish had a population of 2,995, and the village 920 of that number.

CHIRNSIDE,

CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE AND ALLANTON.

CHIRNSIDE is a parish of 5,555 acres, lying in the eastern part of the Merse, on the north-east side of the Whiteadder, and extending four miles in length by about three in breadth. The village is 50 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 13½ N.W. from Greenlaw, 9 N.W. from Berwick, and 6 N. from Dunse. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The upper part of the village is now greatly improved by the erection of several good stone houses, the introduction of gas, and a supply of water brought from about a mile distant.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a United Presbyterian church, and a Reformed Presbyterian church. From the hill on which the village is situated a fine view of many miles of fertile and well cultivated country, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats, is obtained, the view to the south being bounded by the Cheviot hills. The estate of Ninewells, the family seat of the Humes, is in this neighbourhood, and David Hume, the celebrated historian, though born in Edinburgh, was from his infancy brought up in this parish, which may therefore proudly claim him as its own; the mansion is at present occupied by James A. Ross Hume, Esq. Some vestiges of ancient encampments are discernable in this district. Population of Chirnside parish in 1871, 1,418, and of the village, 852.

Less than a mile west of the village is the pretty rural hamlet of CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE, where a good bridge crosses the Whiteadder, and over which also the railway is carried by means of another bridge, a handsome structure of stone. Upon the banks of the river a species of gypsum is found, and in other parts of the district abundance of marl is obtained.

At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village, in the parish of Edrom, one mile from Chirnside, and seven from Dunse, two rivers—the Blackadder and the Whiteadder—unite, and a neat stone bridge crosses the mingled streams. Blackadder House, the seat of Sir George Houston Boswell, is in the centre of the village.

POST OFFICE, CHIRNSIDE, Thomas Darling, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive at fifteen minutes past eight and ten morning, and fifty minutes past six evening; and are despatched at half-past seven morning, twenty minutes past one afternoon, and at twenty minutes past five evening.

COCKBURNSPATH

Is a parish of about 12,652 acres, on the sea coast, the village being 5½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Dunse, 8 S.E. from Dunbar, and 21 N.W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last named towns, and on the line of the North British Railway. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea; behind the cliffs the ground rises gently towards the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines, whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure, but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the torrentuous course of the Pease burn, is thrown "the Peaths," or Pease bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson, in 1786; it is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease burn, which flows beneath, three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon as a masterpiece of architecture. In former days it was understood to be one of the highest bridges in the world, and is consequently, an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile west of the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the "old tower." As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indelible proofs of military operations of former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united with this parish, are still standing. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a Secession chapel are the present places of worship. There is also a very handsome school house. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,133.

COLDINGHAM

Is a parish of about 24,021 acres, ten miles in length and five in breadth, lying on the coast of the German Ocean. The village, a burgh of barony, is 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 21 N.N.W. of Greenlaw, 17 S.E. of Dunbar, 13 N.E. of Duns, 11 N.W. of Berwick, and 4 from Ayton. It is charmingly seated upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, at a short distance from the sea, near to St. Abb's Head, a noted point of land projecting into the sea. A lighthouse was in 1862 erected on this point, and lately a fog signal. Its antiquity is unquestionably great for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain under the Roman sway, and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Coldingham Loch; it is of a triangular figure, upwards of a mile in circumference, and 250 feet above the level of the sea, covering about thirty acres. On the top of Earnshough, 440 yards north of the loch, are the ruins of two oblong British camps, called the Tunlaw, i.e. the Townlaw, in order to distinguish them from other camps beyond Moorburn, called Outlaw, i.e. Outerlaw. On the south side of the town are the ruins of the once magnificent and well endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration; all that now remains of it is the east gable and north side (which form part of the modern parish kirk) with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory. At one time this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell according to tradition, was carried off to Durham. So early as the seventh century a nunnery was settled here, but of what order is unknown, in which St. Elba, the daughter and sister of kings, became abbess in 670. The history of no religious house would throw so much light on the bloody scenes and misgovernment of Scotland, from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century, as this priory, were its history carefully written. The priory has undergone great improvements; the west portion being rebuilt in the same style of architecture as that of the original building, and the south wall also, in a style approaching to the ancient, but without its decorations; the corner towers were carried up, as they were supposed originally to have existed; the roof to a considerable extent was renewed, the ceiling having been replaced with polished stained wood, in imitation of oak; in addition to all these improvements a handsome gate-way was erected. The cost of the improvements was about £2,200, which was defrayed by the munificence of the Crown and the liberality of the heritors. East Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as "Wolf's Crags," in the novel of the "The Bride of Lammermoor." The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is herring fishery, at Coldingham shore, about a mile distant. The village has been much resorted to within late years by sea-bathers, the scarcity of suitable accommodation and distance from the railway being, however, a drawback. The population of the parish of Coldingham, in 1871, was 3,063, and in 1881, 3,159.

POST OFFICE, COLDINGHAM, Thomas Renton, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Ayton by messenger) at a quarter to eight and twenty-five minutes past eleven morning, and are despatched thereto at ten minutes past five morning and fifteen minutes past three afternoon. COLDSTREAM,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ECCLES, BIRGHAM, LEITHOLM, CORNHILL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COLDSTREAM is a town and burgh of barony in the parish of that name. The parish was anciently called LENDEL, but it is a matter of uncertainty when the name was changed, as it appears from many old charters that it was so called in the 11th and 12th centuries. The town is 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.W. from Berwick, 10 A.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Duns, and 9 N.E. from Kelso, situated on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river. By the passage Edward I. entered Scotland, with his oars, in 1296; and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies. It was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is crossed at this place by a strong bridge of freestone, erected in 1766, at a cost of about £7,000, John Smeaton being the engineer. It consists of seven arches, including two for abutments, and is 895 feet long and 25 feet wide. In 1831 it underwent a thorough repair at a cost of about £2,000, under the superintendence of James Cunningham, engineer and surveyor. It is placed at the distance of a furlong from the east end of the town, and from this spot a very delightful view, up and down the woody banks of the river, presents itself. This neighbourhood is the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem of Marmion, a tale of Flodden. The town is irregularly built, quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England, while its border situation at one time rendered it eligible to participate with Gt. Britain in the clandestine matrimonial trade. During the winter season Coldstream is much resorted to by nobility and gentry for fox hunting; the Duke of Buccleuch's and the Berwickshire and East Lothian packs meet regularly in the neighbourhood. The town is governed by commissioners of police for the burgh. Justice of peace courts are held monthly, and sheriff's small debt courts four times a year. The trade here is not extensive, and manufactures are not suited in this locality. Two proprietary banking establishments have branches here. There are several respectable fire and life insurance agencies, and a good inn. A Mechanics' Institute, erected in High Street, in 1863, at a cost of £1,200, contains a large lecture room, library, reading room, &c.; the funds for its erection were raised partly by subscriptions and donations. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a meeting house for the Catholic Apostolic Community. At the east end of the town, erected by the friends of Charles Majoribanks, Esq., late M.P. for Berwickshire, is a handsome memorial to record the successful result of the contested election for this county in 1832. In 1853 Sir John Majoribanks, Bart., of Lees, had powerful hydraulic machinery erected within his grounds, by means of which water is forced up from the Tweed into a large tank on the top of the stable tower, from whence the town is supplied. In connection with the waterworks is a neat fountain situated in the centre of the market place, erected by the same gentleman; in recognition of this public boon, a handsome obelisk was erected near the church by the inhabitants in honour of the donor, with an inscription commemorative of the event. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the restoration. During the winter of 1659/60 he raised here a regiment, which was, therefore, and has ever since been denominated the "Coldstream Guards." Previous to the Reformation, this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. The weekly market, formerly held on Thursday, is now discontinued. The parish contains 8,329 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 2,619, the town having 1,724.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of that name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed. It contains about 12,413 acres. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil rich, and the grounds are well enclosed. There was once a manny of great magnitude and repute in the parish; this religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. The ruin of "Deadriggs," in this district, was formerly the scene of a desperate battle, and a stone which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground is said to mark the grave of one of the Princes who fell in the contest. BIRGHAM and LEITHOLM, two small villages in this parish, is where the principal retail business of it is carried on. The parish in 1871 contained a population of 1,780.

CORNHILL is a neat small village in the parish of its name. Formerly it was a part of North Durham, from which it was separated by Act of Parliament in 1844, and united with the county of Northumberland; it is situated one and a half miles from Coldstream. Coldstream station, on the Kelso branch of the North Eastern railway, is situated here. The soil of the parish is rich and fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, formerly a chapel of ease to Northam, is a neat structure in the early English style; it was first erected, probably, in 1822, but was rendered a distinct benefice in 1789; the living is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. From the rectory a beautiful view of the Tweed presents itself, and in the distance may be seen the celebrated Flodden Field. There is a commodious inn in the village called the Collingwood Arms, where every accommodation can be had. Fairs are held on the first Monday in March (for hiring), and for lambs, cattle, &c. on the 6th July and 26th September. Population in 1871, 781.

CRANSHAWS,

ABBAY SAINT BATHANS, BUNKLE WITH PRESTON, ELLEMFORD AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small thinly populated parish, of about 8,703 acres, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about thirty miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S.E. from Haddington, and about 10 N.W. from Dunse. The old castle of Cranshaws is an ancient edifice of great strength, and still entire. The remains of many encampments show, what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife. In 1871 Cranshaws had a population of 142.

The parish of ABBAY SAINT BATHANS is 7 miles from Dunse, also situated in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whiteadder fertile and well cultivated; but the hilly district is barren and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to St. Bathans by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish. Edwin's or Wodin's, about a mile below St. Bathans, on the Whiteadder, consists of three concentric circles of stone, seven and ten feet distant from each other. The diameter of the innermost circle is about twenty feet. The parish has an area of 4,797 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 195.

BUNKLE AND PRESTON is a united parish forming a square of nearly six miles, and containing 9,189 acres. The soil on the high lands towards the Lammermoor hills, was at one time thin, dry and poor; but by the application of lime and marl it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whiteadder, is a fertile loam, and well cultivated. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the lands in the parish of Bonkill (then so called) were in the possession of a family of the same name; in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonkill is frequently noticed; one of his female descendants, marrying Sir John Stewart, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title in 1377 merged into the family of Douglas, and they, in addition to the title of Earl of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonkill. Population in 1871, 761.

LONGFORMACUS parish, likewise in the Lammermoor district, is hilly, and for the most part pastoral, but the low grounds are well cultivated; it is about twelve miles in length and six in breadth, and contains 19,532 acres. The village, which is about seven miles from Dunse, has been improved by the erection of several neat cottages, a school, and a residence for the minister. An Established church and one for a Free congregation are the places of worship. Two strikingly fine conical hills, called the "Derrington Laws," rise in this parish, and form conspicuous objects in the distance. ELLEMFORD, three miles from Longformacus, is in the same parish, and is much frequented in the summer season by anglers and sportsmen, who find accommodation at a neat small inn. Population in 1871, 452.

Post Receiving House at Mrs. Ewart's, CRANSHAWS.—Letters arrive by the Messenger from Dunse to Longformacus about one afternoon, and are despatched at forty minutes past one morning. Letters from and to Bunkle by the Messenger from Edrom Post Office.

DUNS, OR DUNSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDROM, GAVINTON IN LANGTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNS, or DUNSE, is a burgh of barony, and the largest town in the shire (Berwick not being taken in as strictly belonging to the county); it is 45 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 from Ayrton, and 8 N.E. from Greenlaw. It is a station on the North British line from Reston to St. Boswell's; the station is about half a mile on the east side of the town. It lies nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plain, under the southern skirts of Duns Law, upon which hill the old town of Duns stood previous to its being burnt down. Its present position is at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whiteadder running by it; this river, which produces the finest trout, affords ample sport to the angler. Duns Law, which rises to the height of about five hundred feet at the back of the town, is remarkable in the "Religious History of Scotland." On the 6th of June, 1639, when Charles I. with his army, lay encamped at a place called the Birks, on the opposite side of the Tweed, with the intention of reducing the Covenanters, a Scottish covenanted army of seventy thousand men, under General Leslie, took up their position here, to defend the country from invasion. The army had a battery of forty cannon, on the brow of the hill, pointing in the direction of the king's camp. After lying in this position for three weeks, Charles I. was induced by their threatening attitude to enter into a treaty, in virtue of which the two armies were dissolved. The scenery from Duns Law may be classed as beautiful, and would well repay a short sojourn in the town by the tourist or visitor. Duns is a place of high antiquity, but from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English before the succession of James to the throne of England; on one of these occasions the town records were burnt, so that no account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The present town is generally well built, the streets, lighted with gas, containing many well furnished and handsome shops. It is well supplied with good water, and there are two hotels, viz., the White Swan Hotel, kept by Mr. M'Alpine (who has made great improvements in the house, to ensure the comfort of visitors), and the Black Bull. There are many handsome villas in the suburbs, which are every year extending. There are three branch banking houses. The other principal businesses may be comprised in a brewery, several corn mills, a rope walk, and a good grain trade. Duns commands the principal retail trade of the county, and is celebrated for its markets and fairs for the sale of cattle, sheep, &c. At CUMLEDGE, about two miles north from Duns, there is a large steam and water mill, for the manufacture of blankets and plaidings. The mill was erected about twenty-eight years ago by Mr. William Laidlaw, its present enterprising and spirited proprietor, and it employs about one hundred hands. It is the largest blanket manufactory in this part of Scotland. The town is governed by a chief magistrate and commissioners under the General Police and Improvement Act, 1862; the fairs manage, by a council of nine, the property vested in them. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff's court eight times in the year, at both of which debt claims of limited amount are adjudicated. The Town Hall, a fine Gothic building, standing in the centre of the market place, was originally founded by the Earl of Moray, and the present edifice was erected in 1816, by the fairs, assisted by subscriptions. There is a Corn Exchange and a handsome building called the County buildings, in Newtown street, where the courts are held, and which also contain the police station. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologian, Johannes Duns Scotus, was born here in 1274, and died at Cologne in 1308. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State" and other works, Abraham Robertson, LL.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford, and Thomas McCrie, D.D., in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. Duns Castle, a fine modern mansion, in the castellated style, stands about half a mile north-west of the town. The ancient edifice was the stronghold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and co-patriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William James Hay, Esq., who has let it on a short lease to the Honourable Edward Majoribanks; the interior decorations of the house, and the paintings with which it is embellished, render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. Duns Castle was originally built in the year 1320, by the celebrated Earl of Moray; it was restored and considerable additions made to it in 1820, by its late proprietor, Colonel Hay. Among the paintings in Duns Castle are many saved from the Seton gallery. In particular the well known family group, representing the sixth Lord Seton, the attached friend of Queen Mary, surrounded by his family. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, three United Presbyterian, an Episcopalian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel, and there are Board, Free church and Infant schools, and several private academies in the town.

The parish of Duns contains about 11,896 acres. The weekly market for grain in bulk is held on Tuesday. Fairs on the first Thursday in June, the 26th of August and 17th of November; on Tuesday after for cattle or horses. There are also fairs for sheep on the first Tuesday in March, the first Friday in May, the second Tuesday in July, and third Tuesday in September. The parish in 1871 contained a population of 3,602, the town of Duns comprising 2,618 of that number.

EDROM is a parish and village—the latter about three miles and a half east from Duns, situated near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whiteadder. It is a station on the Duns branch of the North British line; the station is about half a mile from the village. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length by six in breadth, and containing about 9,545 acres, is watered by the Blackadder and Whiteadder streams; Duns Spa, once celebrated for its mineral properties, is on the borders of this parish. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn. There is an Established church and a Board school here. The parish of Edrom (which also contains the village of ALLANTON, given with Chirnside) contained in 1871 a population of 1,513.

LANGTON is a parish comprising the village of GAVINTON, the latter situated two miles from Duns, and half a mile south of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is new and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton; it now includes the whole parish, and belongs to the Honourable Major Robert Baillie Hamilton. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton wood, but for the last century the family have resided at the mansion here; Langton House, which has been re-built on a palatial scale, is in the Elizabethan style of architecture. In a small chapel in Langton wood, between the years 1670 and 1689, the Presbyterians used to assemble for worship, and it was in this humble and secluded temple that Vetch and some other eminent divines occasionally preach d. After the latter period it was used for a short time by the Episcopalians, after which it fell to decay, and not a trace of the building now remains. Upon the top of the hill called Riecloughhead are the vestiges of an ancient British camp. There are a Free church, a handsome new Established church and a new Board school in the village. The acreage of the parish of Langton is about 7,139, and the population in 1871 was 548.

EARLSTON,

LEGERWOOD, REDPATH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EARLSTON (anciently Ercildoun) is a parish and village, the latter 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 11 W. by N. from Kelso, 18 S.W. from Duns, 15 N. from Jedburgh, 10 S.W. from Greenlaw, 8½ N.E. from Galashiels, and 7 S. from Lander. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. At one time the trade of the village and its neighbourhood was confined to weaving certain fabrics for the Glasgow houses, but now the manufacturing of woollens and gingham is carried on, the latter having never been equalled for excellence of quality. At the west end of the village, situated on the bank of the Leader, may be seen in the ruins of an old tower, which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmonth, commonly called "the Rhymer," who flourished in the thirteenth century. A stone in the wall of the church bears the following inscription in ancient characters, "Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place." Cowden Knowes, the residence of William Cotesworth, Esq., J.P., is an ancient building, standing on the side of a hill, the locality of which is famous in Scottish song. There are two fairs, on the 29th of June, and the third Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, and a cattle and sheep market every alternate Monday; also a corn market every Monday. REDPATH is a village in this parish. The parish of Earlston has an area of 9,968 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 1,977, the village having 1,468 of this number.

LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad, and contains about 8,789 acres. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers, and is adapted, in general, both for crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is three miles from Earlston, situate on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Landerdale. BOONHILL, in this parish, was a signal station during the late war. Population in 1871, 525.

POST OFFICE, EARLSTON, Ann McWilliam, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from Edinburgh and Melrose at forty five minutes past eight morning and fifteen minutes past six evening, and are despatched to Edinburgh and Melrose at ten minutes past seven morning and thirty-five minutes past two afternoon, and to Carlisle and Melrose at five evening.

EYEMOUTH,

AYTON, BURNMOUTH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little seaport and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, 50 miles N. from Edinburgh, 21 N.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S.E. from Dunbar, 20 N. from Coldstream, 13½ S.E. from Duns, 8 N. from Berwick, and three from Ayton station on the North British railway. It lies at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. The port is a very ancient one, being known as such as early as the reign of Alexander II., when it was resorted to by the monks of that age as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c., in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven secure from all winds, except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected up the Frith of Forth; and the port is occasionally frequented by wind-bound vessels. The herring fishery is a source of profitable employment to the greater part of the inhabitants, there being 95 boats regularly employed. This number is, however, frequently largely supplemented by boats from other ports, the total number engaged in this industry being as high as 132. In October, 1881, 45 large boats were employed at the white winter fishing, but in the terrible storm on the 14th of that month, when 129 lives were lost from this port alone the number of boats was reduced to 24. The annual produce of the fishing now amounts to about £40,000. Eyemouth was a great depot for smugglers; it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the preventive service, together with a judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long since destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, an Evangelical Union church, and chapels for Primitive Methodists and United Presbyterians are the places of worship. A handsome school was erected in 1876. The St. Abt's Lodge of Master Masons and the Land of Cakes Royal Arch Chapter hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge room formed in 1757; it was in this room that Burns, the poet, was made a Royal Arch Mason. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays of June and October. The parish of Eyemouth, which embraces an area of 1,904 statute acres, contained in 1871 a population of 2,772, and in 1881, 2,935, the town having 2,816, the burgh 2,825, landward 110.

AYTON is a parish and village, the latter 2¼ miles from Eyemouth, and 8 N.W. from Berwick, occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the main line of railway between Edinburgh and the South. The parish contains about 6,699 acres, and describes an area of about 4 miles each way, including about two miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky; more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. A church, the foundation stone of which was laid September 8th, 1864, was erected near to the old one, which for many years past had been falling into decay. It is in the English Gothic style of the 14th century, with a lofty tower and contains sittings for nearly 800 persons. The cost was about £7,000, to which sum Mr. Innes was a liberal contributor. A handsome chapel has also been erected, in lieu of one of the two Presbyterian places of worship. A justice of the peace court is held here monthly, and a sheriff's court for the recovery of small debts is held four times a year. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,983, and in 1881, 2,039; of the village, 862.

BURNMOUTH is a small fishing village, having a harbour situated at the foot of an almost perpendicular ledge of rock; the sea tags standing near to high water mark give it a very romantic appearance. The heights in the vicinity afford very beautiful and varied scenery, extending to the Eildons on the south, Lammermoor on the west, and Bamburgh on the east—the north being the ocean. It is about 2½ miles from Ayton, and 6 from Berwick. It is a coast-guard station, and there is a railway station close to the entrance to the village, on the North British line. A new Board school has been erected lately, but there is no place of worship. Eighteen boats are regularly employed and stationed here for herring fishing, and ten or a larger class for white fishing in the winter season.

FOULDEN AND MORDINGTON.

FOULDEN is a parish and village, the latter one of the prettiest little places in the county, and was formerly a burgh of barony, 52 miles E. by S. of Edinburgh, 10 E. of Duns, and 5 N.E. of Berwick; pleasantly situated on the north side of the Whiteadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. Within the last twenty years the dwellings have been nearly all rebuilt in a neat and picturesque style. John Wilkie, Esq., is superior of the burgh. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district is two and a half miles in length by two in breadth, bounded by Ayton on the north and Hutton on the south, and contains about 3,278 acres. Foulden church is celebrated as having been the meeting place of the commissioners sent by Queen Elizabeth to vindicate her execution of Mary Queen of Scots. In 1871 the parish had a population of 425.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the mansion house of Mordington that Cromwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV. in Lamberton church (now in ruins) in this parish. At the boundary of the parish, with the liberties of Berwick, is the toll-bar and hamlet of LAMBERTON and at this place (within the Scottish border) marriages were solemnised in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principles, as they were better known Gretna. The remains of a Danish camp—Edrington Castle, situate at top of a steep rock, and the "Witches' Know," 649 feet high, where, little more than a century ago, several unfortunate women were burnt for witchcraft—are objects not unworthy the notice of the traveller journeying through this part of the county. Ironstone some years ago was discovered within the parish, and subsequently coal has been got on the estate of John Campbell Renton, Esq., of Mordington House. The parish contains about 2,939 acres. Population in 1871, 402.

GREENLAW, GORDON AND HUME.

GREENLAW is a burgh of barony, and considered (although Duns is considerably larger) the county town of Berwickshire; it is 37 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 20 W. from Berwick, 12 E. from Lauder, 7½ S.W. from Duns, and 10 N.W. from Coldstream. It is situated in a valley, on the north bank of the Blackadder, which stream is crossed by two bridges, and consists of one long street, with a large square or green, where the fairs were held, in the centre of which are the county buildings. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred first to Old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain), and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I., when they held their sittings at Duns. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1696, and by act of Parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county. A sheriff court and one for the recovery of small debts are held monthly; the justices' court sits at Duns. The old gaol and courthouse, which stood in the churchyard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831, at the sole expense of and presented to the shire by the late Sir W. H. Campbell. The parish of Greenlaw lies in the centre of the shire, extending seven or eight miles in length, from north to south, and on an average about two miles in breadth, containing about 13,143 acres. The surface of the land is for the most part level, rising occasionally into slight detached eminences. Sheep walks, moor, and soil adapted to turnips are the main characteristics of the land. Besides the Established church, there are places of worship for Free church and United Presbyterian congregations. A cattle fair used to be held on the 22nd of May, and on the last Thursday in October, but these are now discontinued. In 1871 the parish of Greenlaw contained a population of 1,831, of this number the village had 823; in 1881 the parish contained 1,245, and the village 747 persons.

Gordon village is 5 miles from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish which extends seven miles in length by from two to four in breadth, and contains 9,713 acres. At Gordon resided, as it is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon, and Huntly and Huntlywood, the names of two farms in the parish, claim the honour of giving the title of Marquis of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknowe Tower, a venerable structure (now the property of James Dalrymple, Esq.), was frequently had recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised of the incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms. An Established church and a Free church are the places of worship. The parish of Gordon had in 1871 a population of 876, the village having 336 of this number; in 1881 the parish numbered 632, and the village 330.

Hume is a small village, situate 3 miles south from Greenlaw; it is a joint parish with Stronach (Roxburghshire). The remains of Hume Castle, noted during the contentious on the borders, stands on a bold eminence, which commands extensive and picturesque views over the greatest portion of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The soil is very rich and fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. A Board school is in the village, and a burial ground, but no place of worship. The joint parish contains an area of 6,838 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 848, and in 1881, 749.

HUTTON AND PAXTON

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton and district of Merse, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whiteadder. Hutton is situate about seven miles from Berwick, its post town, in the northern part of the parish, and Paxton, five miles distant from Berwick, its post town, is in the eastern quarter. The parish contains 5,516 acres. The Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union bridge, from a point near Paxton to a place a little below Horn-cliffe, a village in the county of Northumberland; it forms the only connection of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure; it admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. The parish church is situated at Hutton.

The late Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Boethius, was minister of this parish. Paxton House, the residence of Colonel David Milne Home, Conservative member for Berwick, is noted for its picture gallery. A new school and school house, built by the father and mother of Colonel Home, at Paxton, is an ornament to the village. The parish of Hutton in 1871 contained a population of 1,077, the village of Paxton at the same period having 836.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BLAINSLIE, CHANNELKIRK, OXTON AND THIRLSTANE.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 3½ w. of Berwick, 21 N. of Jedburgh, 22 S.W. of Coldstream, 20 S.W. of Duns, 17 N.W. of Kelso, 12 w. of Greenlaw, 7 N. of Earlstoun, and about 6 miles from the Stow station on the North British railway. It is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, with an additional street about the centre, at the west end of which is the town house. The buildings are plain and of irregular construction, and the town was destitute of any edifice that could lay claim to particular notice until of late years. Now there are good school premises, neat and substantial houses, an excellent inn (the Black Bull), in the centre of the town, where every accommodation will be found, a bank, and a few tasteful villas in the neighbourhood. The trade is chiefly of a local and domestic nature, and manufacturers have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district. The bank and the inns, several insurance agency offices, and some well stored shops represent the main business of the place. A Freemasons' Lodge is held in the Town Hall. The charter constituting Lauder a royal burgh was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two bailies and seven councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. A justice of peace court is held on the fourth Wednesday of January, March, May, July, September and November; and sheriff's small debt courts are held last Wednesday of February, first Wednesday of July, and first Monday of October. By the Reform Act, it is joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to Parliament. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free Church, and a Presbyterian meeting house. The church, which stands to the south of the town house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice though cruciform, is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirlstane Castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine wood, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale. The castle stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, and is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II., and decorated with massive balustrades and coivices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March for servants and hords, sixth Tuesday after first Tuesday in March for servants, Friday before the 12th of August for lambs, and fourth Friday in October for servants. The parish of Lauder contains about 34,596 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 2,120, the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 1,046; the latter in 1881, had a population of 964.

BLAINSLIE is a small rural village in the parish of Melrose (Roxburghshire), situated at the extreme end of the parish, and about seven miles from the town of Melrose. It lies on the old road from Earlstoun to Lauder, four miles distant from the former place, and two and a half from the latter, from whence its letters are delivered.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK, containing about 14,191 acres, is situated among the Lammermoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwick. On the banks of the rivulets, which united form the river Leader, or Lauder, are about 3,000 acres in tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath, and are very bleak and unproductive. Population in 1871, 705.

The village of OXTON, now called OXTON, is about four miles from Lauder, on the south of the Edinburgh road, in the upper part of the vale of the Leader. OXTON is now the only village in the parish, and in it the little business or trade that has existence throughout its entire extent is almost exclusively centred. About a mile to the west of OXTON, are the remains of the village of CHANNELKIRK, from which the parish takes its name, the minister's manse and church being all that remain of the village, which at one time was a resting-place for travellers by the old Edinburgh road, through the Lammermoors to Lauderdale. Population in 1871, 705.

POLWARTH AND FOGO.

POLWARTH is a parish of about 3,000 acres, in the district of Merse. The village, now almost decayed, is forty miles from Edinburgh, four from Duns, and about three and a half from Greenlaw, situated on the road between the two last-named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connection with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was an ancient custom for every new married pair, with their company, to dance round an ancient thorn, the legend connected with which, according to Chambers, might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair of Heimandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in co-heiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors, and they had many, preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home of Wedderburn, and it so happened that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), whilst the eldest placed her affections on the youngest, whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies, they fell into the hands of an uncle, who, anxious to prevent their marriages that he himself might become their heir, immured them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemma the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers, by means of an old female beggar and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths accompanied by a determined band of Merse men, before the gate of their prison. The uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain, his nieces were forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicing (for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued) consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which, even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes; and while George carried on the line in the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair, for many years all future marriage parties danced round the thorn, and a tune seems to have been composed, of the name "Polwarth on the Green," to which songs have been successfully adapted. On the front of the parish church, an ancient building, which stands about a mile south-east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church, Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont, and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which was happily effected. The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. H. Campbell, Bart., and his lady has established an infants' school. The parish of Polwarth in 1871 had a population of 249.

The parish of Fogo, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream, said to be so fatal to the salmon species, stands the little village of Fogo; and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of CHESTERS, reposing on the site of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length, by between three and four in breadth, and contains about 4,652 acres; the land is chiefly arable and fertile. A neat church and Board school are in the village. Population in 1871, 502.

RESTON,

AUCHENCROW, GRANT'S HOUSE, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RESTON and AUCHENCROW are two villages pleasantly situated on the banks of the Eye, in the parish of Coldingham, the former being three miles from Coldingham, the same distance from Ayton, and about nine from Duns; the latter lying between Reston and Chirnside, about two and a half miles from each place. A station on the North British Railway is in the village of Reston. The places of worship are a Free church, recently erected at Reston, and an Established church and one for members of the Free church at Houndwood, a mile distant from Reston. A parochial school is in Reston, and there is also a school in Auchencrow. Live stock sales are held every alternate Monday.

GRANT'S HOUSE is a village or hamlet in the same parish as the above, situated on the road to Edinburgh, seven miles from Coldingham, eight from Ayton and five from Cockburnspath. The place derives its name from a person named Grant, the contractor for making the high road to Edinburgh, who erected a cottage for himself, now called Grant's House Inn. From the circumstance of the North British Railway passing the village, it bids fair to be a compact little place. RENTON is a small hamlet, a mile distant.

SWINTON, WITH SIMPRIM,

WHITSOME, LADYKIRK AND HORNDEAN.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIM was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse, and contains 5,561 acres. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the n at village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles s.e. of Edinburgh, 12 s.w. of Berwick, and 6 N. of Coldstream. The small village of Simprim is situated at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars, or swine, whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants. The grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordinance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State," was for some time minister of Simprim. A handsome school was erected in 1877, at a cost of £2,000. In 1871 the united parishes had a population of 395, and in 1881, 964, the village of Swinton possessing 410 of this number.

WHITSOME, including the abrogated parish of Hillton, is about four miles and a half long and two and a half broad, and contains 4,896 acres. The land is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or oozy ground. The small village of Whitsome is nearly situated in the centre of the parish, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton. Population in 1871, 608, and in 1881, 556.

The parish of LADYKIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two miles, and containing 3,360 acres. A bridge has been thrown across the Tweed here, constructed by subscription, a most valuable improvement to this locality, as fatal accidents frequently occurred by fording the river at this part. The church of Ladykirk, a venerable building completely encased in ivy, stands near the Tweed, about four miles from Swinton and nine from Berwick. Tradition ascribes its erection to the fourth James, in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood when fording the river here at the head of his army. He dedicated the edifice to "Our Lady," hence denominated Ladykirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsclington. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation, cultivation has made it rich and beautiful, and it is celebrated for the breed of cattle and sheep. The small village of HORNDEAN belongs to this parish. An annual fair is held in Ladykirk on the 5th of April. Population of the parish in 1871, 518, and in 1881, 506.

WESTRUTHER, HOUNDSLOW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WESTRUTHER is a parish, chiefly in the Lammermoor district. The village, a small one, is 33 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 8 from Lauder, 6 W. by N. from Greenlaw, and 5 N. from Gordon, situated on the road between Lauder and Duns. The parish, which is six miles in length by four in breadth, and containing 11,630 acres, is under the best process of husbandry. Spottiswoode, the fine residence of Lady Scott, is in this parish; Wedderlie, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is in the neighbourhood, and the ruins of Ively Castle, the walls of which are pretty entire, stand in the north-eastern corner of the parish. It was one of those castellated mansions of residence and defence that were common on the borders before the union of the two crowns, in the reign of James VI.

There are two places of worship—one under the Establishment, the other a Free church. There is also a Board school. In this parish is the village of HOUNDSLOW, a straggling assemblage of dwellings. The land in the vicinity is of a barren nature, but great improvements have been made, and every year shows an increased extent under culture. In 1871 the parish had a population of 731.

BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of BUTE, ARRAN, GREAT AND LITTLE CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ), HOLY ISLE, PLANDA, and INCH-MARNOCH, compose this shire, which comprises 225 square miles of land, or 143,997 acres. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyllshire; and the water divisions between the island and the latter is often so slender that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of "the Kyles of Bute." The southern part forms the western shores of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indentation of bays on either side. The length of the island is fifteen and its breadth averages five miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous, but on the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable with low grounds of being cultivated so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty, and both the botanist and the geologist will find it a rich field for their respective researches. The antiquary, also, will discover many relics of bygone days existing in the island; among others, the interesting ruins of Rothesay, East and West Kames and Kilmory Castles. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is little or no extent of sea-beach, in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side, the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the late Marquis of Bute, and the family seat, Mount Stuart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde.

The CLIMATE of Buteshire is eminently salubrious—neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on the hills, and the only qualification to its general genial character is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, is a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Emanuel Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large island of ARRAN lies five miles south-west of Bute, and between the peninsular of Cantyre, and Ayrshire; in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south twenty miles, and in breadth twelve. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude. A small portion of the lower grounds are cultivated, but the whole is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called "the King's Cave," from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Baliol, and ascended the throne of Scotland, and is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernised seat, called Broilick Castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamnish and Brodick. It was formerly famous for the excellence of its whiskey; and coal, freestone, and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to Saint Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the Isle of Bute and Ayrshire; the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length, by a breadth of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital, and only town on the island, is Millport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached; this latter island is about a mile in length by half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the objects of contest with the Scots. Two-thirds of the larger Cumbray belong to the Earl of Glasgow, and the remainder is the property of the Marquis of Bute. The Earl of Eglington is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one time contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but three parishes, and the shire altogether only seven. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in Parliament by one member, the present member being Charles Dalrymple, Esq. Bute gives the title of Marquis to the family of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquis of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II., who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in 1703. The lord lieutenant of the county is Lieut.-Colonel J. F. D. Crichton-Stuart. The parliamentary constituency for 1831-32 was 1,485. According to the returns presented to Government in 1871, the population of the shire was 16,996, and by those for 1881, 17,666. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named period was 3,865; uninhabited, 649; building, 19.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BRODICK AND LAMLASH, WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN has been partially described under the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes, KILBRIDE and KILMORY. Kilbride parish occupies about one-half of the island, on the east side, extending twenty-five miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from Saint Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have been extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. The present edifice, which is situated in LAMLASH, was erected in 1774. The anchorage in Lamlash Bay is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland, affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish Channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high protecting rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay, is the village where there is a good inn, called the Lamlash Hotel. In this parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles, or places of worship. Brodick Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfell mountain, which eminence rises nearly three thousand feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a very handsome and commodious family hotel, facing the new pier, enclosed in spacious grounds, and a splendid view may be obtained from the various apartments of this hotel, including Brodick Bay, Goatfell mountain, and Glenrosa, together with the coast of Ayrshire, and Argyleshire; it was erected by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, and is in the occupation of Mr. Peter Macdonald. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island. The Isle of Arran, which embraces an area of 105,436 statute acres, contained in 1871 a population of 5,234, and in 1881, 4,762.

The parish of KILMORY (Kil-a-Mhoire, or St. Mary's burying place), occupies fully more than half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory, which has recently been stripped and handsomely rebuilt by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, at a cost of £1,800, is situate on the southern extremity. "For fertility of soil," as a recent writer remarks, "Kilmory is truly like the Garden of Eden. In the neighbourhood of Lagg Hotel, or of the parish church, the district is one of the finest and richest in the province—neither bath bestowed on man. Dairy produce is abundant, and fair crops from large fields well laid out with good fences. The hills are of moderate height, and so accessible to culture that every spot is convertible to use." The island is noted for its situation as a herring fishery, but this is pursued by only a comparatively small portion of the inhabitants, chiefly at the north end. The staple industry of the island is agriculture, which, under the fostering care of the Arran Farmers' Society, who hold annual ploughing matches, cattle shows, &c., is attaining to a degree of excellence which will compare favourably with some of the best cultivated districts on the mainland. The majority of the inhabitants are occupiers of small plots of land, but a considerable moiety occupy holdings rented at from about £100 to £300. The smaller tenants taking advantage of the influx of summer visitors find house letting a ready source of providing additional winter comforts, and even those who by industry and thrift have managed to lay up a decent competence, do not hesitate to ex-empore for dwellings every available outhouse, in order to place the ordinary house accommodation at the disposal of the incomers. As a summer resort the island is held in high reputation, as, besides possessing a climate highly salubrious—the longevity of the people being remarkable—it presents ample opportunities for boating, sea and trout fishing, botanical and geological researches, and kindred outdoor pursuits. All the streams, many of which afford tolerably good sport to the careful angler, are free to all comers, except two in the neighbourhood of Dugartie Shootin' Lodge. Game is abundant, as it is also so copiously preserved by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, who, however, places no restriction on the peregrinations of excursionists, prosecution for trespass being unknown on the island. A good road runs along the shore for the whole circuit of the island, a distance of sixty miles, while two roads cut across from shore to shore—one from Lagg to Lamlash, and the other from Shiskine to Brodick. Following the road along the shore, 25 miles of the distance traversed are within the limits of Kilbride parish, and the remaining 35 miles within Kilmory parish. Till within the last twenty or thirty years scarcely any part of Arran, beyond the Brodick district—always rich in woodland—could boast of trees; now, however, by the exertions of the Duke of Hamilton's foresters, plantations of considerable extent and growth form a special feature of attraction in various localities, the beautiful and wooded glen of Lagg, in Kilmory parish, and other sequestered spots, presenting a combination of scenery which never fails to "satisfy the eye and make the mind glad." The island is copiously watered by the numerous streams issuing on either side from the "great backbone of mountain rock," extending from north to south. Its natural beauties have again and again formed the subject for the artists' pencil, and the poets' theme. Mountain, rock, and glen, and deep ravine, and gushing stream, appearing in panoramic succession, form a pleasing background to the belt of green pasture slopes and cultivated land, which, for the most part, fringe the seaboard of the island. Fairs are held at Brodick on the first Tuesday after the 26th of June; and at Lamlash in the months of April and October. Population of the parish of Kilmory in 1871, 2,379; and of the parish of Kilbride, 2,380; in 1881 Kilmory had a population of 2,742, and Kilbride, 2,020.

MILLPORT (ISLE OF CUMBRAY.)

THE ISLES OF CUMBRAY (or Cumbrae) have been already noticed on a preceding page, in the description of Buteshire. Millport is a burgh, constituted 1864, under the Act 23 and 24 Vic., cap. 93, and is governed by commissioners and a senior and two junior magistrates. It is chiefly resorted to for sea-bathing, being charmingly situated on the south side of the great Cumbrae, about four miles from Largs, in Argyshire; between which town, as well as Androssan, Ayr, Greenock and Glasgow, communication is maintained by means of a regular service of steam-packets. The excellent harbour and pier here present perfect conveniences for the landing or embarkation of passengers. Ninety years ago this place possessed only one dwelling, the hut of a fisherman. The number of inhabitants in the two Cumbraes amounts at the present time to about six or seven hundred and fifty, and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the Isles. The village is gas-lighted, a parochial board exists, a sheriff and small debts court is held in March and September, and a cricket club and choral society are established. Pleasantly situated on the shore is a beautiful marine pavilion, in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the Earl of Glasgow, who is owner of nearly two-thirds of the Isle, the remainder belonging to the Marquis of Bute. The principal object of attraction is the Episcopal College and Church, a beautiful Gothic erection, situated on an eminence overlooking the town and bay; an elegant spire surmounts the church, the grounds are extensive and laid out in lawns, terraces and parterres, which are adorned with the choicest flowers and shrubs; indeed everything evinces signs of the most correct taste. The college and church were opened in 1850 and 1851 respectively, and were founded and endowed by the Hon. George Frederick Boyle. The college is devoted to the education of students, and the church has now become the Cathedral of the Isles of Argy and Bute. The other places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a plain edifice, with a handsome quadrangular tower; an Episcopal church, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. The schools, three in number, are well attended. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—chiefly fishermen and owners of their own boats. Some parts of the greater Cumbrae are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the LESSER CUMBRAY is a lighthouse. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglinton.

ROTHESAY,

KAMESBURGH (OR PORT BANNATYNE), ASCOG, KINGARTH, KERRYCROY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESAY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of its parish, 96 miles w. from Edinburgh (by Mid-Calden), 40 s.w. from Glasgow, 18 from Greenock, 22 from Largs, in the Isle of Arran, 12 from Cumbrae, and 9 from Largs; finely situated at the head of a bay, called Rthesay on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Rthesay was its castle, whose ruins yet exist, and the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it. The first mention of it in his story is in 1223, when it was besieged by Hushac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance. Having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1253, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Balliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce. In 1394, Edward Balliol retook the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited this castle in 1376, in 1381, and in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, Duke of Rthesay, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent. Additional facts are given in Mr. W. A. Wilson's admirable "Guide to Rthesay," to which we refer our readers.

The herring fishery, which has long been active here, caused a great revival in Rthesay, and stimulated the restoration of decayed buildings, and the erection of new ones; fish curing is still carried on, but not to the same extent as formerly. Cotton spinning and the manufacture of cotton and muslins by power looms give employment to many hundreds of hands; there are several mills or factories in Rthesay, worked by steam power; at the present time, however, there is only one working. Three branch banks and one for savings, and several comfortable hotels are in the town. The Bute Hotel, at the head of the pier, the Queen's Hotel, in Argyle street, and the Victoria, in Victoria street, being the principal; they are all conducted in a manner satisfactory to their numerous visitors. The lodging houses are very numerous, and upon every scale. Two newspapers are published here every Saturday, the Butesman and the Rthesay Chronicle. About a mile to the east of the town is a salutary mineral spring, very efficacious in cutaneous diseases; near this is Glenburn House Hydropathic Establishment. The revenue of the burgh derived from rents, feu duties, gas works, harbour dues, &c. amounted in 1881 to £14,573. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent. The present pier was erected in 1822, it has since been enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened, at a very considerable expense. In the east harbour (Princes pier) a pier has also been erected to facilitate the landing of heavy goods. A proposal is made to adapt the same for steamers landing passengers thereat.

The site of a battery, which was erected early in the present century, when Napoleon threatened to invade Britain, on a point adjoining Mount Stuart road, on the shore of the east bay, is now occupied by the Rthesay Royal Aquarium. In front of the east pier, an elegant fountain has been erected, as a memorial of the late Prince Consort, and another neat fountain is erected in Guilford square. The town hall and county buildings were rebuilt at an expense of upwards of £29,000, raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions; they form a handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant castellated tower, containing a bell, and beautiful clock, having four transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the late lamented Marquis of Bute; the edifice comprises a spacious court room, in which the sheriff, burgh and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerk's and procurator fiscal's offices, with other requisite apartments. At the east end of the handsome courthouse is a painting of the late Lord Bute, by Mr. Graham Gilbert. Beneath the court room is the prison, which was enlarged in 1870. The new public halls are a handsome pile of buildings facing Princes pier, and are used for concerts, lectures, public meetings, &c. seating upwards of 1,350 persons. There are several good schools and academies in the town, amongst the latter is the Rthesay Academy and the Thomson Institute, which was erected and partially endowed by the trustees of the late Duncan Thomson, Esq. archbp. Bute. It provides a course of classical and general education, suited to the demand of the present time. The building is a noble pile in the Gothic style of architecture, and occupies a commanding site on the rising ground of the west bay, in the middle of a park kindly presented by the present Marquis of Bute. The Academy has been transferred to the School Board of the burgh. Rthesay was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III., under charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI. in 1584. The government of the town is invested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, the town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff and commissary courts are held every Tuesday and Thursday; a justice of peace court for the recovery of small debts sits on the first Monday in every month. The quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October, and all criminal cases for the circuit court justiciary are tried at Inverary. The list of places of worship will be found at the end of the Directory of the town, and the educational establishments at the commencement.

In the neighbourhood of this respectable town are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About five miles south-east is Mount Stuart, the beautiful and romantic seat of the Marquis of Bute. About two miles south-west, and at the end of the Chappelton road, is Woodend, or (as it is more generally designated) "Kean's Cottage," from having been built by that eminent tragedian; the house stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of Loch Faoi, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of various mills.

The climate of Bute being very salutary, from its mildness, to those afflicted with pulmonary complaints, the faculty recommend numerous patients to the balmy influence of Rthesay. Four miles to the north-east, on the opposite shore of the bay, in Argyshire, is Castle Toward, a massive modern edifice, erected by the late Kirkman Finlay, Esq., and now the residence of his son; the grounds contain the ruins of the ancient castle.

The parish of Rthesay extends over an area of 6,088 statute acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 8,027, and in 1881, 8,311.

KAMESBURGH or Port Bannatyne (the latter being better known) is situated 2 1/2 miles north from Rthesay, and is a fish-curing station. This branch of industry is, however, not prosecuted extensively at the present time. The port possesses a small quay, and there are several well-furnished houses, the latter occupied principally by the families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat. Half a mile distant is the ancient Castle of Kames, the property of the Marquis of Bute. Nearly a mile to the west is the new church of North Bute, erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the late Marquis of Bute; and in the village is the Free church, erected in 1843. Population of North Bute parish in 1881, 1,206.

ASCOG, about three miles s.e. from Rthesay, is situated on a lovely bay. There are many elegant mansions and villas here, and on a point of rock jutting out into the water, is a neat Free church, in the grounds of which, to the east, rest the remains of the famous painter, Montague Stanley. At the extreme south end of the island, above Dunagail Bay, there stands an extensive vitrified fort, and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called Chapel hill, rising above Argyle street, were the remains of the ancient chapel of St. Bride, removed when improving the hill. The Bute Farmers' Society has done much for the agriculture and farm stock of the island, premiums and prizes for which are awarded at the annual show, which is held in Rothsay, in May. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, the last Wednesday in October, and Tuesday before Kilbarochan December fair—all chiefly for cattle.

Four miles from Rothsay is KERRYCROFT hamlet, pleasantly situated on Scoulag Bay, the village forming a crescent round the strand. The entrance to Mount Stuart policies commences here, and between the village and Ascog is a Board school.

KILCHATTAN village, about eight miles S. of Rothsay, is beautifully situated on a bay of the same name. Within a short distance is the parish church of KINGARTH, an elegant modern edifice, and in the village are a Free church and school. Half a mile from the east shore are the remains of a druidical circle, and towards the west shore, and also near the north-east shore of the bay, are several other interesting druidical remains. In the neighbourhood of Kilchattan is the curious promontory of Garrochthead; about a mile to the south of this, in a quiet romantic dell, stand the remains of the church or chapel of St. Blane, and about a mile south-west from St. Blane's chapel is the walled fort of Dumnagoli. The area of the parish of Kingarth is 8,995 statute acres, and in 1871 its population numbered 901, and in 1881, 1,265.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Frith on the north separates the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about thirty in breadth at the middle; altogether it comprehends an area of 712 square miles, or 448,068 acres.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catinii, from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and the monumental remains, indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Gernego, the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity; before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction. At length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson, by the female line, of Robert II.; he was made chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II., and received a grant of the earldom of Caithness. The earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the crown in the reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is almost entirely argillaceous heavy land, lying upon horizontal clay-slate, which, in wet seasons, keeps the water upon the surface. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few enclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county above the level of the sea are, Maiden's Paps, 2,000 ft.; Searry Hills, 1,876 ft.; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 ft. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809 a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads throughout the country has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county; clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated, and the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and beans, both of good quality, the yearly exports amounting to many thousand bolls. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game, and throughout the district hares, rabbits, grouse, plovers, and a bird called the snowfleet are plentiful; the latter bird, about the size of a sparrow, is exceedingly fat and delicious. In the caverns along the coast seals form their harbours; the hunters enter in small boats, with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, which they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. This county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat. Freestone and limestone abound in many parts. The CLIMATE, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude (fifty-ninth degree), where the duration of the night at one period of the year is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets, and some waters of greater magnitude; the principal among the latter are Forss and Thurso rivers on the north-west, and Wick and Berrydale on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Wattin, a fine sheet of water, about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of any note are Sinclair Bay, on the north-east, and Cannes Bay, on the north. The county has been recently benefited by the introduction of railways, and by means of the Highland Railway the towns of Wick, Thurso, &c. have been placed in direct communication with all parts of the country.

Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso. The county sends one member to Parliament; and Wick joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, elects another representative. The present member for the county is Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart. The parliamentary constituency for 1881-82 was 1,171. The Earl of Caithness is lord-lieutenant of the county. By the census returns for 1871, the entire county contained a population of 89,992, and by those for 1881, 88,845. There were at the latter date 7,814 inhabited houses, 269 uninhabited, and 57 in course of erection in the county.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON,

DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, TORBEG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of LATHERON, 13 miles s. from Wick, and 25 n. from Helmsdale, situated on the south-east side of the county; the parish extends from the Ord of Caithness twenty-seven miles along the coast, by a breadth of from thirteen to fifteen miles. The village, which, some thirty years ago sprung from a mere waste, goes on increasing annually in population and in extension of habitations. The houses are substantially built and regularly laid out, and in the suburbs are some which are entitled to come under the description of neat and handsome residences. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully or beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour. The "Brothers Port," the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these "sea kings," or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flows into it with trees (still extant), earth, moss and stone; and thus converted into a solid beach and corn-field what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day. However, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation. A proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since, mooring ring-bolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high water mark. Upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman Catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty cottages. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship, and with these are connected schools.

LATHERON kirk stands half way on the coast near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso. DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, and TORBEG, are also villages in Latheron parish. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the second Tuesday in November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th July. In 1871 the population of the parish of Latheron was 7,400; of this number 883 were returned for the village of Lybster.

THURSO,

CASTLETOWN IN OLRIG, REAY, HALKIRK AND DUNNET.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20½ N.W. from Wick, the same distance W. from John O'Groats, 46 E. from Tongue, and 96 from Bonar Bridge, by the way of Tongue and the Western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, on the head of a spacious bay, surrounded by a rocky coast; its headlands forming a bow, render it one of the finest bays in the kingdom. Here the turbulent waves of the Pentland Firth and the powerful currents find resistance in the east by Dunnethead, which stretches out its rocky promontory with a precipitous front, whilst the furious winds from the west are checked in their wild career by the Holburn head, whose original name, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is "Iverhorsa"; Iver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed here in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfueus, the Danish historian, mentions that in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms "The Town of Caithness," and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. His adds, that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II., King of Scotland, about the year 1005, resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes in Moray, which in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. We find by one of the statutes of King David of Scotland, that the weights and measures of Caithness, or Thurso, were the standard for Scotland. Vessels of any burthen may find shelter in the bay under any weather, and few places possess superior advantages for refuge to the mariner as Scrabster roads, as it is called. There is a pier, erected by subscription, but it is not of that magnitude demanded by the nature of the place and the depth of water which one upon a larger scale, with the addition of a breakwater, would ensure. A promenade is now (1883) in course of construction facing the sea, at the expense of the inhabitants of the town, and when complete will be upwards of 300 yards in length. The town, which is situated two miles to the eastward, on the left bank of the river, is neat, clean, and rapidly increasing in size. There is a line of railway in connection with the Sutherland and Highland Railway, which affords a direct communication between Wick, Thurso and the South. The walks in the neighbourhood of the town are romantic, and some approach close to the edge of the precipitous cliffs overhanging the sea. The river, too, is beautiful, and famed for the almost miraculous draughts of salmon occasionally furnished. Either bank is connected by an elegant stone bridge, but the want of a better pier is much felt, as vessels intending to enter must wait the tide before they cross the bar. This is a great inconvenience to the main export of the place, which consists of the "Caithness pavement," an article in great demand, and the manufacture of which is carried on to a prodigious extent, and involves the prosperity of the place. The peculiar excellence belonging to this staple is its durability, its resistance to moisture, and its retention of an unbroken surface. Specimens may be seen in the new houses of Parliament, London, and many public buildings throughout the United Kingdom. Nowhere in Scotland has agricultural progress been so rapid as in Caithness. The industry and energy of the farmer generally rise in proportion to the obstacles which nature presents. Immense tracts of heath land, which would have been left uncultivated in the fertile Lowlands, have been subjected to the plough, whilst many thousands of acres of bog and swamp have been drained. The monetary establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the British Linen Co.'s Bank, and a Savings Bank. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., as superior.

The places of worship are the parish church, two Free churches, and chapels for the Original Seceders and Independents. The church of the Establishment is a neat Gothic structure, with a tower and clock—the latter presented by the late Henry Miller, Esq., of London, but a native of Thurso. The first Free church is conspicuous for its elegance of architecture. There are public and Free church schools well conducted and attended. Two institutions have been erected in Thurso, the first-mentioned situated at the top of Sinclair street, and was endowed by Alexander Miller, Esq., for the education of males; the second erected by public subscription, and situate in Olrig street, for the education of females. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., which has been recently greatly enlarged and modernised. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq., one the plenipotentiaries from the court of Saint James for settling the peace of 1783. It is also the birthplace of the late Sir John Sinclair, Bart., of Ulbster, whose name is associated with the statistical account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions, to whose memory a very elegant monument of freestone has been erected on a square piece of ground fronting the Established church; it was presented to the town by Alexander Miller, Esq. The late Robert Dick, an eminent botanist and geologist, was a resident of this town, and his collection of specimens now forms an important part of the Thurso museum. The weekly market is held on Friday, and the annual fairs on the second Tuesday in July and first Friday in September. By the returns made to Government in 1871, the parish of Thurso had a population of 5,754, the town containing 3,622; in 1881 the numbers returned were: for the parish 6,167; for the town 4,023.

REAY is a parish, about ten miles W. of Thurso. It is very wild and hilly, Birna mountain being 2,900 feet above the sea level. The parish is about seventeen miles long, with a breadth of eight miles. There is lime, granite, millstone, with traces of lead and iron, mineral springs, &c. There are Established and Free churches and schools in the parish. Fairs are held on the Monday before and Tuesday after August 15th. Population of the parish in 1871, 2,381, and in 1881, 2,191.

CASTLETOWN is a small neat village, in the parish of Olrig, situated rather more than 15 miles N.W. of Wick, and nearly 6 E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the estate of Castlehill, from which is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring and flagging footways, &c.; it lies in beds of from three-quarters of an inch to six inches in thickness. Blocks have often been raised measuring one hundred superficial feet; from hence they are carried to the shore, where they are prepared and dressed, previous to shipping, to facilitate which a small and convenient harbour has been formed. In 1871 the parish of Olrig had a population of 2,021, Castletown having 911 of that number; in 1881 the parish numbered 1,996, and the village 938.

DUNNET, a parish 3 miles N.E. from Castletown, about ten miles long by four wide, is the most northern part of Scotland. Dunnet Head is a rock from 100 to 400 feet high. There is a light upon it at an altitude of 346 feet, first lighted in 1831, and is seen by the mariner for 23 miles. There are Established and Free churches, together with schools. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April and October (old style) for cattle, horses, and pigs. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,661, and in 1881, 1,605.

HALKIRK is a parish, 7 miles S. of Thurso, about 24 miles in length, by a breadth of about 4. It contains about 24 small lakes abounding with trout, &c. There are Established and Free churches, and public schools. Many ruins may be seen in this parish. The main line of the Sutherland and Caithness Railway passes through and has a station here. Population in 1871, 2,664, and in 1881, 2,708.

WICK,

LOUISBURGH, PULTENEYTOWN, WATTEN, BOWER, CANISBAY AND KEISS.

WICK is a parish and royal burgh; the town, a considerable one, improving and flourishing, is 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 61 N. by E. from Dornoch, and 20 S.W. from Thurso; situated on the north east coast of Caithness, forming the segment of a circle around the bay of Wick, and along the banks of the river Wick, where it enters the German Ocean. The town is divided into three parts, viz., PULTENEYTOWN, LOUISBURGH and WICK. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes. Bridge street, more regular in its construction, is ornamented by several elegant erections, among which the town and county buildings form a neat and handsome pile, faced with freestone and surmounted by a cupola with a public clock. The Town Hall has a spacious apartment, containing portraits of the late eminent Sir John Sinclair, and other local celebrities, and which is used as a council room, and for the meetings of the commissioners of supply for the county; also the town clerk's and other offices. Within the last few years the aspect of Bridge street has entirely changed. Many new buildings, all having architectural features more or less pretentious, taking the place of the old houses. The Town and County Bank, Limited, the County Court House, the Station Hotel, Wick Free Church, Brim's and Gunn's buildings make up a total which would not be discredit to a much larger town. The Temperance Hall, seated for 1,200 people, is the chief place in which public meetings and entertainments are held. STAXIGOE, BROADHAVEN, KEISS and SARCLET are suburban villages populated principally by fishermen, having each a separate harbour. The harbour of Sarclet is now a total wreck, with little prospect of being rebuilt.

PULTENEYTOWN, which may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce and fisheries of Wick, was purchased when a mere waste by the society in London formed for extending British Fisheries, and various means have been adopted to carry out the great and beneficial objects of the society. The local business of the society is managed by an agent, whose residence overlooks the harbour, and who is ex-officio chairman of the Pulteneytown Improvement Commission, who, under a special Act of Parliament, have the oversight of lighting and cleaning the town, for which an assessment is imposed. The fees and rental of Pulteneytown go into the revenue of the British Fisheries Society. The port of Wick consists of two harbours of fair dimensions, but altogether inadequate for the immense fishery business of the town; one of its chief drawbacks being that the fishing fleet cannot gain access to the port except at half tide. A new breakwater was constructed at a cost of about £120,000, but the magnificent erection is now no longer to be seen, having been demolished by the fearful storms which sweep across the North Sea from the north-east, and spend their force upon the Caithness coast. Should the Government wipe off the debt of £69,000, now a burden on the old harbour, a new breakwater, after plans approved by the Board of Trade, will be speedily gone on with. Owing to the excessively perilous nature of the east coast fishing ground, a deep sea harbour is imperatively needed here to prevent the frequently recurring disasters which take place along the coast. The harbours, which were formerly under the care of the British Fisheries Society, were about two years ago handed over to the Pulteneytown Harbour Trust, by special Act of Parliament. While the royal burgh of Wick can trace its history back for centuries, Pulteneytown can only speak of its generations, and so much more fortunate is it in this respect, while Wick and Louisburgh consist chiefly of closes and lanes, Pulteneytown has been from the first laid out on a settled plan. Its regular streets, squares and terraces compare favourably with that of any northern town. Here the whole work of the town is done. Its cooperages, flour mills, net, rope and woollen manufactories, saw mills and distillery, employ two-thirds of the whole population. On the Wick side of the river is Mr. McEwen's Caithness steam saw mills and cabinet works, which is one of the largest establishments of the kind north of Aberdeen. Pulteneytown is supplied with water from the loch of Hempriggs, and Wick, which has heretofore been without a water supply has just concluded a contract for bringing water from the loch of Yarrows, at a cost of £6,000. Ship building has entirely ceased since the demise of Mr. Bremner, whose engineering talents were successfully employed in floating the Great Britain steam-ship, which grounded on the coast of Ireland; but the business of boat building has greatly increased, and with the manufacture of herring barrels and nets is the principal source of employment for the non-fishing class. The herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season commencing in July and ending in September, the home fishery is prosecuted to an extent almost unparalleled elsewhere. From May to July the fishermen are busily engaged with the summer fishing at Stornoway and other places in the Western Hebrides. During the home-fishing the population is increased by an influx of about five thousand Highlanders, men and women, who come as "hired hands." The scene both on water and land at this time is not to be equalled anywhere. About 700 boats manned by six men each, set sail every evening for the fishing ground, the distance to which varies from 1½ to 60 miles, and return next morning. The sight, which is unique, is witnessed by spectators who come from all parts of the country. The gutting and curing of the herrings gives labour to hundreds of men and women, and on a busy day the quays present a scene both animated and picturesque. On all sides one hears the voice of Gaelic and broad Scotch, mingled with French, Dutch, German, and almost every other national tongue. The winter herring, cod and ling fishing is carried on extensively. It brings to the town fishbuyers from all the large centres of population in England. The fish exported from Wick during a year is computed at about £300,000, the benefits from which is diffused over a wide district. The railway transports the whole winter catch to the southern markets, while the 62 vessels belonging to the port, and a large contingent from other Scotch ports, and also foreign vessels, are busily engaged taking the summer fish to Dantzic, Hamburg, St. Peterburgh, and other places on the continent, and various ports in Ireland. Six branch banks are established here, namely, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. There is also a National Security Savings Bank which is well supported. There are two weekly newspapers, the Northern Ensign and the John O' Groat Journal.

Wick was elected into a royal burgh in the year 1589, by the influence of George, Earl of Caithness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle Gernego, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin; it is situated about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Adjoining the Castle of Gernego, is Sinclair Castle of almost equal antiquity. Near by stands Ackergill Tower, the residence of G. Duff Dunbar, Esq. (of Hempriggs), who receives nearly one-third the rental of the whole parish of Wick—the valuation of the parish being £46,000. Another interesting ruin in the vicinity is Oliphant Castle known as the "Old Man of Wick," which along with the lighthouse on Noss head (one of the best lights around the British Isles) form excellent land marks to seamen. There are numerous remains of Pictish dwellings in the district; five stone coffins and a number of weapons and a collection of pottery have been found in different parts of the parish. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh and the returning station at elections. It joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty in returning a member to the Imperial Parliament, its present representative being John Pender, Esq. The government of the town is vested in fifteen councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer; their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, and the amount of their revenue inconsiderable, and confined to the rental of market dues and some curing stations. There is a justice of peace court and a sheriff's court, the former sitting every alternate Monday, the latter every Tuesday and Friday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where within the county. The customs collection extends from Meikle Ferry to Cape Wrath, with sub-stations at Thurso and Little Ferry, the number of shipping registered being about 6,500 tons. Different foreign states are represented by resident vice-consuls.

There are places of worship of the Establishment and the Free Church of Scotland, of the former one in Wick and one in Pulteneytown, and of the latter one in Wick and two in Pulteneytown, and others for congregations of United Presbyterians, Independents, Evangelical Union, Baptists, Roman Catholics, and Episcopalians. The United Presbyterians and Episcopalians have recently built new churches, thereby adding greatly to the architectural beauty of the town; the locality of each and their officiating ministers are given in the Directory. The Pulteneytown Academy was founded and endowed by the British Fisheries Society, but is now under the control of the burgh School Board. Since the passing of the education act great improvements have been made in the schools of this district. The North and South public schools and West Banks public schools are of a chaste and imposing construction and were erected at great cost. The Chamber of Commerce is composed of the principal business men in the district and meets on the first day of January every year. The Agricultural Society holds an important annual cattle show at Geogemas, on the last Friday in February. A market is held every Friday, and fairs on the 24th June (if Tuesday), or Tuesday after, Tuesday after 20th July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th November (old style), but the stock of the district is generally disposed of at trysts held at Geogemas hill, now rising into importance as a market ground. In 1871 the parliamentary burgh of Wick contained a population of 8,151, and 1881, 8,025.

WATTEN is a parish situated about nine miles W.N.W. of Wick, and is bounded on the north by Bower, on the east by Wick, on the south by Latheron, and on the west by Halkirk. In the north-west part of the parish, which is of a square figure and measures from seven to eight miles each way, there is a fine sheet of water about three miles in length called Loch Watten, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. There are places of worship in connection with the Established and Free churches, and a public school in the village. The parish of Watten comprises an area of 89,000 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 1,453, and 1881 1,406.

CANISBAY is a parish 7 miles from Keiss, situated on the Pentland Frith, and includes Duncansby Head, John o' Groat's House and Strom Island. In size it is about ten miles by five; the inhabitants being chiefly occupied in agriculture and fishing. There are Established and Free churches and a public school in the parish. Population in 1871, 2,729, and in 1881, 2,626.

BOWER is a parish 10 miles N.W. of Wick, and in size is about 11 miles by 8, rising towards Heather Cowcarrin, from which a fine view is obtained. Population in 1871, 1,700, and in 1881, 1,608.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland, is bounded on the south and west by the Frith [of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire; on the east, also; it joins for a short distance the county of Fife, and a detached portion of Stirlingshire touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed nine miles at its greatest length, nor more than six at its extreme breadth, and it has an area of fifty square miles, or 31,876 statute acres.

Anciently the whole of the valuable territory lying between the rivers Frith and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil Hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers; one of them, near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another, contiguous to Tillicoultry, is supposed from its similarity of architecture to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third the Alloa tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. From the shore of the Forth, the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil Hills, the highest of which, Benclough, attains the height of 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts, adjacent to the Forth, are rich, arable and beautifully enclosed. Besides the Forth, the county is watered by two other streams, namely, the Devon and the Black Devon, and it is connected with RAILWAYS, by means of branches of the North British Railway, communicating with Alloa, Clackmannan, Alva and Tillicoultry.

MANUFACTURES, PRODUCE, &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, tartans, &c., has been for many years established in the parishes of Dollar, Tillicoultry and Alva, with complete success, and the villages belonging them have become thriving places in consequence, and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. Throughout the whole district coal is worked.

This shire contains four parishes and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloa, Clackmannan, Dollar, Alva and Tillicoultry. The county possesses neither royal or parliamentary burghs, but it unites with Kinross-shire in returning on member to Parliament. The present member sitting for the joint counties is John Blair Balfour, Esq. q.c. The parliamentary constituency in 1881-82 was 1,494. The entire county contained, by the census returns for 1871, a population of 23,747, and by those for 1881, 25,677. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named date was 5,815; uninhabited, 565; and in course of erection, 20

ALLOA,

WITH SOUTH ALLOA, TULLIBODY, SAUCHIE AND CAMBUS.

ALLOA is a town of considerable commercial importance, and the leading one of the county, 30 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 32 s. from Perth, 7 from Stirling, the same distance from Dollar, 5 from Kincardine, and 3 from Tulliculter. The word "Alloa" is supposed to be a corruption of the Celtic words "Aul wacg," signifying the way to the sea, or the sea-way. It is situated on the north bank of the river Forth, at the point where the river ends and the Frith begins. At this spot, and for ten miles above it, the water is deep enough to admit vessels of 70 tons. The quay stretches along the bank, and large vessels or steamboats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, to the great convenience of passengers, and is the more worthy of appreciation as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. Till 1854 Alloa was a burgh of barony, under the management of trustees, but in February of that year, the inhabitants by a large majority adopted the Burgh and Police Act. The burgh of Alloa is governed by a board of nine commissioners, constituted agreeably to the provisions of the Police and Improvement Act, one of them acting as a chief magistrate, and two of them as junior magistrates. An ordinary meeting is held on the second Monday each month, and statutory meetings on the second Monday of the months of January, April, July and October. Of late the town has considerably improved in appearance, many of the oldest houses having been removed to make room for others of a more modern class; and even the streets best known in older days have had their courses altered or been materially improved. Many public buildings have been added of late, constructed in such a style as to enhance the appearance of the town. At the top of Mar street is situated the Court House, erected at a cost of £8,700, which was formally opened on the 8th of December, 1865. About the middle of High street is the Corn Exchange, which is used also as a public hall. Powers having been acquired for fencing the glebe which lies to the west of the town, a new suburb is making its appearance there, the principal building being the Archaeological Museum and Hall. This institution was erected in 1874, and besides furnishing the members of the Archaeological Society with suitable accommodation for their specimens, library and meetings, affords advantages to the public for meetings of a smaller kind than those held in the Corn Exchange. At a little distance from this hall a new burgh school has been built on the site of the old assembly rooms and parochial school. The premises are large and ornamental, presenting a striking contrast to the old dingy building they replace. In Greenside street are the Paton School and the Christian Institute; the former was erected from a trust fund left by the late Alexander Paton, Esq., of Cowden Park, for educational purposes, and is suitably endowed. The front of the school faces the foot of Candle street, and, with its ornamental tower, presents a handsome appearance. The latter was built by D. Paton, Esq., and placed by him under trustees for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. In Bank street, which is a continuation of West Mill street, are the Municipal buildings. The old Burgh chambers had long been felt to be unsuitable, and in 1872 the commissioners of the town proceeded to erect the very beautiful buildings which grace the street in which they stand. Villas are rising to the west in rapid succession, adding much to the beauty of the place, and in 1877 land was acquired by the Commissioners, as a feu, from the Earl of Mar and Kellie, which has been laid out as a public park; it extends to over 20 acres, is triangular in shape, and generally level with the exception of a slight elevation at the north-east corner; it was formally opened on the 1st of May, 1878. At the east end of the town a new cemetery has been laid out, which covers an area of six acres.

The trade of Alloa has been gradually increasing, and it is expected that recent improvements and enlargement of the dock will contribute to its further development. Beside the brewing and yarn trades, for which the town is so noted, many other articles of industry are produced. There are in the town several foundries—iron, copper and brass—extensive bottle works, a pottery, to which has been added a department for glass engraving, machine works, cooperages, saw mills, a ship-building yard, and brick and tile works. The collieries around Alloa are very numerous, and the export trade of the port depends to a large extent upon them. The Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British railway passes through the suburbs, and has a station at the top of Primrose street, thus affording quick transit to all parts of the country. There are five branch banking establishments—the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland, together with a Bank for Savings. Three newspapers are published in Alloa weekly—the Advertiser, the Circular, and the Journal. Immense quantities of whiskey are manufactured here, the Carsbridge Distillery, one of the largest in the kingdom, being capable of producing from 50,000 to 60,000 gallons of proof spirit weekly, and the quality and quantity of the ale exceed those of any other town in Scotland. About 100 vessels, of various burthens, belong to Alloa and its adjacent creeks. The exports comprise ale, whiskey, glass bottles, coal, wool and woolen goods; the imports are timber, oak, bark, hides, butter, cheese, and large supplies of grain for malting. The latter forms now a principal feature in the imports; large vessels of 600 or 700 tons may be seen discharging here at one time. A daily communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns on the Frith is afforded by steam packets throughout the year; and the ferry steamboats (on board of which a carriage and four horses may be driven without either horses or passengers being removed) give every facility to families proceeding to the south side of the river. On the south side of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, are extensive timber yards and sawing and planing mills, and also a terminus of a branch of the Caledonian railway. The landed proprietor here is Sir Alexander Gibson-Maitland.

A free shipping port is formed at this part of the Forth. The great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit, show this locality as eminently eligible for the purpose, as is proved by the fact of the large number of vessels daily arriving. A bill has been obtained in Parliament for the purpose of making a railway from the South Alloa branch of the Caledonian line to the town, with a bridge over the Forth, the undertaking being promoted by an independent company, backed by the Caledonian Company, who subscribe £40,000 of the necessary capital. The ordinary and small debt courts are held weekly in Alloa; a sheriff court once every week, and a justice of the peace court for the county at stated periods, and a fairs court annually.

The Established church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 20th of June, 1819, forms one of the most prominent objects in the town. It is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, and was raised at an expense of £8,000. The spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by public subscription; the Earl of Mar added considerably to its improvement by giving a bell and a fine clock. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, a Baptist chapel, a handsome new church recently erected for the Episcopians, with a peal of bells equal to any in Scotland, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one for Swedenborgians. The educational institutions embrace a Burgh school, the Paton school, Board schools, an academy, an Industrial school, an Episcopal school, a Roman Catholic school, and one or two of a private character. The Alloa Hospital, which was instituted in February, 1867, mainly through the liberality of the late Earl of Kellie, is designed for the medical and surgical treatment of persons in the County of Clackmannan, suffering from disease or accident. A detached building is available to the local authorities of the burgh and parish of Alloa, for the reception of persons suffering from infectious diseases. It is under the management of a committee who are annually appointed from the subscribers, and is supported by voluntary subscriptions. In winter two curling clubs, viz., the Alloa club and the Prince of Wales' club, meet on their respective ponds to practice the "roaring game." The convivial festival of "King Crispin" was first celebrated here in 1824, with the customary pomp, pageantry, and ceremonies. The town is well supplied with gas, the Alloa gas works, which were up to 1877 in the possession of a private company being now the property of the Commissioners, having been acquired by them at a cost of £23,250, the amount fixed by the valuers. Until 1832 Alloa was very badly supplied with water, but in that year a supply was obtained from a large artificial loch known as Gartmorn Dam, which covers 160 acres of ground, and in 1837, the supply being inadequate, two large filtering beds were constructed in addition, the water being conveyed to the town through 10-inch and 12-inch main pipes; the total cost of the waterworks up to the present time is £6,000.

Alloa in its immediate neighbourhood presents scenery at once lovely, bold and picturesque. On the north side is the proud range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and which are, perhaps, unrivalled in the fascination of Scottish landscape; the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour, and its borders the embellishments of rural taste. Stirling Castle on the west, and the Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east, empower the pencil to complete the picture, and present to the eye a panorama of no common brilliancy. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place. They forfeited the earldom by their participation in the ill-digested rebellion of 1715, and the title and privileges were not restored until June, 1824, when the inhabitants, on the welcome intelligence of the resumption of these appanages by their landlord, the late John Francis, Earl of Mar (who had endeared himself to the tenantry by a life devoted to the promotion of their happiness and the prosperity of Alloa), celebrated the event by every demonstration of gratitude and joy. Alloa Tower was long the residence of this family. It was a quadrangular building, but was in 1800 partly destroyed by fire, and the square tower now standing is all that remains of the ancient structure, and though time and the elements are hastening its decay, it is still a place of great strength. The walls are eleven feet thick, and the highest turret is eighty nine feet. It was built by the sovereigns of Scotland previous to the thirteenth century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. It has frequently been the resort and residence of royalty. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary spent a portion of her youth and maturity with the Mar family; her son James also passed many of his youthful days here, having been committed by his mother to the then Earl of Mar; and his son, Prince Henry, received a part of his education in this tower, under the celebrated George Buchanan. The prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive, and worthy the attention of the tourist and stranger. The tower is now uninhabited. Alloa market is abundantly supplied with every necessary during the week, and more particularly on Saturday. Cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, May, April, August and November, all new style. The parish of Alloa embraces an area of 5,499 statute acres, with a population in 1871, of 9,940, and in 1881 of 11,628, the burgh at the same period containing 8,812.

CAMBUS is a small village situated on the Forth, in the parish of Alloa, and two miles therefrom, and five from Stirling, its post town. It is also a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British railway and the branch line to Alloa. The river Devon here discharges itself into the Forth, and there is a pier where small vessels are enabled to discharge and load. Brewing and distilling are extensively carried on here. Population in 1871, 478, and in 1881, 209.

SOUTH ALLOA is a village and thriving seaport in the parish of Airth, situated on the south bank of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, in the county of Stirling; it is crossed by a ferry. There is a station here on the South Alloa branch of the Caledonian main line. SAUCHIE (New and Old) are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parishes of Alloa and Clackmannan, nearly two miles north of Alloa, on the road to Alva. There is an Established church here, which was built in the year 1844. A great number of colliers, employed by the Alloa Company, reside in these villages, and there is a good school in connection with the colliery in which their children are instructed. A fine Board school, with accommodation for 360 scholars, has been built at a cost of £2,000; it is in the Gothic style of architecture, and has a very imposing appearance.

TULLIBODY parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation, and the village is situated two miles west from that town. The ancient kirk of Tullibody, the date of which is 1549, was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character. In the year 1659 it was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie, Esq., of Tullibody, and fitted up as a place of worship for the use of this populous district. There is also a very neat Free church, which was erected in 1845, and is adjoining the old kirk, and there is a Board school in the village. Population in 1871, 649.

ALVA AND TILlicOUNTRY,

WITH COALSNAUGHTON.

ALVA is a parish and thriving burgh and a station on the Alva branch of the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British Railway; the town is seven miles E. from Stirling, three from Alloa, two W. from Tillicoultry, and five W. from Dollar, charmingly situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a stream that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic and interesting glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of the falls issues from an aperture in the rock above and tumbles from a height of forty feet in one unbroken mass into a naturally-formed basin below. An excellent pathway has recently been formed through the glen, which tourists now visit from all quarters. This parish belongs to Stirlingshire, although locally detached from that county, and surrounded on all sides by Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, such as silver, copper, iron and lead. Sir John Erskine, of Alva, about the year 1715, assisted by some miners from Leadhills, discovered a very rich vein of silver, in a romantic glen, about midway between Alva House and the town. The precious metal made its appearance in small threads, which, upon being followed, led to a very rich mass of ore; some of it was so rich that fourteen ounces of ore yielded twelve ounces of silver. So easily was the deposit of treasure reached, that not more than £50 sterling had been expended on it when the prize was found; and during a space of little more than three months it is said that ore was obtained from which Sir John drew from £40,000 to £50,000. After this mass was exhausted, the ore became so scarce as not to repay the expense of working, and hence the enterprise was abandoned. In the year 1767, Lord Alva, nephew to Sir John Erskine, caused a pair of communion cups to be made, for the use of the church of Alva, from some of the remains of that ore then in his possession. On these the following inscription is engraved: "Sacris in Ecclesia S. Servani, apud Alveith, A.D., ex argento indigend, D.D.C.V.—Jacobus Erskine."

The district also abounds with coal, which is wrought to a great extent. The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of fancy plaids, shawls, tartans, &c., is carried on in the town and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills; these, with their tall chimneys, exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. In 1876 the inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1864) Act. Under the powers thus acquired improvements of great importance have already been completed, and there is no doubt that the adoption of the act is a boon to the inhabitants. In the town is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. The House of Alva, the residence of James Johnston, Esq., stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Woodhill, about two hundred and twenty feet above the bed of the Devon, which flows westward to join the Forth in the valley below, and fourteen hundred below the apex of the mountain. From the summit, which rises to an elevation of 1,770 feet above sea level, the eye sweeps over an immense range of picturesque and interesting scenery, stretching all the way from the German Ocean on the east to the Campsie hills on the west, and includes, among other attractive objects, the Lammermuir chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's Seat, the Pentland Hills, and the lovely and classic winding of the Forth. Perhaps the most interesting object for an antiquarian in the whole parish of Alva would be the Well of St. Serf, or Servanus, the tutelary saint of the district, which continues to pour out its bright and sweet waters in the minister's glebe at a little distance from the parish church. In 1874, public baths and washhouses were erected at the west end of the town at a cost of about £4,000, the gift of the Laird of Alva, James Johnstone, Esq., who, also, about the same time, presented the inhabitants with a public park, and in 1873 a new cemetery was provided by the Parochial Board, which has been tastefully laid out and arranged. The places of worship are Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. The parish of Alva contains an area of 5,458 acres, and had in 1871 a population of 4,296, and in 1881, 5,118, the burgh containing 4,961.

TILlicOUNTRY, a parish and burgh, two miles east of Alva, and three west of Dollar, is pleasantly situated on the east side of the Ochil hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kinross—nine miles from the former, and fifteen from the latter town. The Devon valley branch of the North British Railway runs through here. It is well supplied with excellent water from a stream that issues from the hills immediately behind the village. The river Devon, when not far from its source, and when flowing eastward, forms the northern boundary of the parish of Tillicoultry; and after pursuing a circuitous course of about fourteen miles beyond the parish again enters it running eastward, and cuts its arable plain into two nearly equal parts. The town of Tillicoultry is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufacture established here, and likewise at DEVONSDALE, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, clan tartans, tweeds, &c. In these branches the town and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a very large number of the industrious class. The inhabitants, like their neighbours at Alva, have adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act, and the town is now governed by nine commissioners, having a chief magistrate at its head. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established in the town. In 1878, James Archibald, Esq., presented to the commissioners the sum of £1,500 for the erection of a tower and spire to the Popular Institute, which is situated on the north side of the town, and a handsome tower and spire, furnished with an illuminated clock and bell, have been added to the building. An Orphanage was founded by the liberality of the late James Paton, Esq., who bequeathed the sum of £5,000 towards the endowment of such an institution. The building is situated at the north side of the town, and is capable of accommodating thirty inmates. The parish abounds with coal, which is profitably worked. The scenery of the neighbourhood is as interesting as that of any part of this county. Benluch, the loftiest of the Ochils, rises directly to the north of the town, to the height of 2,300 feet above the level of the sea. The view from the summit of this mountain is very grand and extensive. The hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals, and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company: the metal sold at £50 per ton, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable. The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the town, and the remains of a druidical circle on the south end of a rising ground lying to the east of it, called Cuninghar. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and one belonging to a congregation of the Evangelical Union. There was erected in 1876, at a cost of about £3,000, a chapel for the Congregationalists at the east end of the town. Handsome Board schools were erected in the centre of the High street in 1875, at a cost of about £3,000. COALSNAUGHTON is a small hamlet in this parish. The parish of Tillicoultry embraces an area of 6,946 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 5,118, and in 1881, 5,314, the burgh containing 3,732.

CLACKMANNAN,

THE capital of the county and parish of that name, though not now entitled to that rank from either its size, population or commercial importance, was at one period a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior facilities for commerce possessed by that place, it has sunk into comparative insignificance. It is 32 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, and two miles from Alloa, pleasantly situated on an eminence gently rising to the height of nearly two hundred feet above the level of the Forth. The surrounding scenery is very delightful, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this tower was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is eighty feet high, and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a spiral staircase. In the centre of the town is a square tower and a portion of the west cable of an old building, which was formerly the county court-house and gaol; it was fast going to ruin, but in 1865 was restored and furnished with a new clock having transparent dials, and, through the liberality of the late Francis Horne, Esq. is now an ornament to the town. Close to the tower is the market cross, which, although a relic of bygone days, is in a good state of preservation. Mention may also be made of a whinstone, which is to be seen at the Cross, upon which the king is represented to have frequently sat. To save this stone from spoilage of virtuosos, a number of gentlemen were at the expense of elevating it on the top of a stone pillar ten or twelve feet high. The principal trade of Clackmannan is that derived from the coal mines, which supply employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes; and at KILBAGIE, a short distance from the town, there is a works established for the making of pulp from esparto grass, and which now also manufactures paper. A large woollen factory, employing about two hundred hands, has been erected near the river Devon by Messrs. Paton, of Alloa. Tun and vat building is also carried on here. The soil of the parish in the course is considered the richest arable in the shire, and under the best state of cultivation. There are two ports, one at POWSIDE and the other at KENNETFANS, where coals are extensively shipped. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. The first mentioned, erected in 1814 at an expense of £4,500, is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of 2,000 persons. There are five public schools in the parish, with an average attendance of 800 children. Acreage, 9,427. Population of the parish in 1871, 4,653 and in 1881, 4,618; of the town, 1,501.

DOLLAR,

WITH GLENDEVON AND MUCKART (PERTHSHIRE), AND THE VILLAGES OF POWMILL AND BLAIRINGONE
(PARTLY IN KINROSS-SHIRE AND STIRLINGSHIRE.)

DOLLAR is a parish and village, situate at the base of the Ochil hills, near their eastern extremity, on the road from Stirling to Kinross, 9 miles from Clackmannan, 7 from Alloa, 12 from Stirling, and 12 from Kinross. A great proportion of the consequence this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to its Academy, which was erected and endowed by the munificent bequest of John Macnab, a native of the parish, who, though originally a herd boy, acquired by industry and perseverance a large fortune. By his last will he directed that one-half of that fortune should be vested in the public funds, or some such security, in order that it might yield an annual income "for the endowment of a Charity or School for the Poor of the Parish of Dollar." The bequest was made to the minister and elders of the parish, for the time being, as trustees. A very handsome edifice was erected in 1818, and masters appointed to teach the Hebrew, Greek and Latin languages, together with English, French, and other modern tongues; mathematics, natural philosophy, geography, botany, drawing, writing, arithmetic, fencing, gymnastics, music, &c. Five female teachers are also connected with the institution. Near the close of each session, examiners sent by the Syndicate of the University of Cambridge, or by one of the Scottish Universities, subject all the classes to a strict examination, and report to the trustees. In the centre of the building is a large hall, containing the library, with about 6,000 volumes. These books are lent to pupils and heads of families having children at the academy, free of charge. Adjoining the academy is a well-kept garden of about five acres, to which pupils and the public have access. The children of parents belonging to the parish, or who have gained a settlement in it, are entitled to free instruction and books. Other special advantages are enjoyed by those who distinguish themselves in the classes. Many of these, after completing their studies, have risen to eminent positions in life. The number of pupils at the present time (1882) is about eight hundred, a considerable portion being boarders from various parts of the United Kingdom and the continent. The scheme of education is regulated so as to prepare either for the universities, for commercial pursuits, or for civil engineering. The engineering course is recognised by the Secretary of State for India as adequate for the preparation of candidates for civil engineering in that country. The entire staff of the institution embraces the principal and nineteen teachers. Boarders are received by the principal, most of the masters, and other respectable residents. In 1847 an Act of Parliament was obtained, constituting a new and extended board of trustees, some of whom are not necessarily members of the Established church. Dollar now boasts a goodly number of genteel houses and elegant villas, a respectable hotel, and numerous well-furnished shops. It has also four handsome churches—Established, Free, Episcopal and United Presbyterian—the latter erected in 1876, at a cost of about £4,500, at the north end of the village; also a commodious Mission Hall, a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and extensive bleach works, the property of William J. Haig, Esq. About a mile from the village is the venerable ruin of Castle Campbell, once the occasional residence of the Argyle family, and which was taken in 1644 by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock; and in the hill itself is a remarkable chasm, called "Kemp's Score," which still bears some marks of a stair. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the tourist for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery. The name of John Knox, the Scottish reformer, is intimately associated with Castle Campbell. In the autumn of 1864 application was made by the people of Dollar to Sir Andrew Orr, the proprietor of the estate, for permission to construct a new footpath, making access to the ruin more easy, and opening up some of the most wild and beautiful scenery imaginable. The desired permission was readily granted. A subscription was commenced, which soon amounted to upwards of £100, and in the month of May, 1865, the path was opened. It is fully 1½ mile in length, and embraces, besides the land scenery, a number of beautiful waterfalls. The attractions of the place have thus been greatly increased. Half-yearly fairs are held here on the second Monday in May and third Monday in October. The parish of Dollar has an area of 4,773 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 2,524, and in 1881, 2,500.

MUCKART is a parish in Perthshire, 3 miles from Dollar, 11 from Alloa, and 18 from Crieff. It is triangular in shape, and its length from east to west is about 5 miles, its greatest breadth from north to south about 2½ miles. The Devon forms its principal boundary, separating it from Fossoway on the south and east, while on the north and west two small streams separate it respectively from Glendevon and Dollar. A branch of the Ochil hills runs east and west along the northern boundary of the parish, terminating on the east by a conical-shaped hill called sea-mab, about 1,350 feet above sea level. The Devon in this neighbourhood displays a number of interesting waterfalls, amongst which are the falls of RUMBLING BRIDGE, DEVIL'S MILL, and CALDRON LINN. The water passes through fissures in the rocks, which in many places present the appearance of having been rent asunder. When viewed from the parapet of the Rumbling Bridge, 120 feet above the level of the sea, the scenery beneath, on both sides, is such as not to be often met with, large numbers of visitors being drawn to the spot, and since the opening of the Devon Valley branch of the North British railway, for which there is a station, this locality has become much frequented. In 1644 every house in Muckart parish, including the church, was burnt by the Marquis of Montrose, when he sacked and destroyed Castle Campbell, at that time belonging to the Earl of Argyle. Besides the parish church, which is at Poor, a small village, there is an United Presbyterian church, and also in the centre of the parish a Board school. The soil of Muckart is in general light and gravelly, but in some parts it is more retentive. Acreage, 4,923. Population in 1871, 612, and in 1881, 601.

GLENDEVON is a parish in Perthshire, situated about 6 miles from Dollar, 14 from Alloa, and 15 from Crieff. It is pleasantly situated in a glen, the Ochil hills bounding it on the north and south. The Devon runs through the village, and in the neighbourhood there are some very beautiful falls; the river also abounds in trout, and in the season anglers have good sport. There is also a mill here for wool spinning and the manufacture of tweeds. The only church (the Established) is situated about a mile from the village. The nearest railway station is at Rumbling Bridge, about 8½ miles distant. Acreage, 9,183. Population of the parish in 1871, 105, and 1881, 104.

POWMILL and BLAIRINGONE are hamlets in the parish of Fossoway, which is partly in Kinross-shire and partly in Perthshire, distant about four and two and a half miles respectively from Dollar, their post town. There are two small collieries, one at Blairingone and the other at LAMBHILL, the latter is about a mile and a half north of the former. The quoad sacra church is situated at the east end of Blairingone, close to the public school, both buildings being of stone. Blairingone is a quoad sacra parish and has a School Board of its own. The nearest railway station is at Dollar.

Station, RUMBLING BRIDGE—Robert Bryce,

DUMBARTONSHIRE,

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently *Dun-bartons*hire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the west it is separated from Argyllshire by Loch Long, Perthshire touches its northern extremity, the county of Stirling bounds it on the east and also on the north, Lanarkshire on the south-east, and the Clyde separates it from the county of Renfrew on the south. The figure of this county is rather singular; it describes almost a perfect crescent or semicircle, protruding on the south and south-west, its concavity being filled through its whole extent on the north and north-east by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles, while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad; the parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling. This severed portion of the county is twelve miles long by from two to four and a half miles broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. The entire shire embraces an area of 270 square miles, or 172,677 acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In ancient times the name of the shire was Levanach, signifying “the country of the Leven,” which was corrupted in the course of years to Levenax, and more latterly to Lennox. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacottie or Eithacaci, a word importing “dwellers along the extremity of the wood.” The descendants of this people were not enslaved or expelled from their hunting grounds by the Romans, they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde; and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying “the hill of the Britons.” This region, until the early part of the last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior, and were finally extirpated or reduced to quiescence and subordination only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom, called Alwyn, the son of Arkil, was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1673, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, devolved upon Charles II., as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times great improvements have been effected in this county, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last sixty years a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. A century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland—bleachfields, about that period, made their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven. About 1768 the first printworks were established on the Leven, soon afterwards others sprung into operation, and at this time there are various manufactures carried on throughout the shire. Ship building, both iron and wood, is a branch of some importance. Until 1881 the glass works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat, but they have now ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom, but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some ironstone.

MOUNTAINS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county; of the former, the chief are those of Arrochar, Lass, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and abound with moors, mosses and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are much less elevated, Benvoirlich, adjoining Perthshire, has the highest altitude, rising 3,300 feet above the level of the sea. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton Castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs, among these are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and, perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland, is that of Loch Lomond; it lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque; on Inch Cailoch (or the Island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church, and on Inch Murrinis (or the Island of St. Murrinis, two miles long, and converted into a deer park) are the ruins of a house once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms. It abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon; the purity of the stream and the richness of its banks soothe the mind of the traveller, while the bleachfields, printworks and cotton mills, the villages, hamlets and gentlemen's seats scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district. The North British railway possesses stations at Dumbarton, Cardross, Helensburgh, Renton, Alexandria and Balloch, and the Edinburgh and Glasgow line has stations at Castle Cary and Kirkintilloch.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into twelve parishes, ten of which form the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—Dumbarton, four burghs of barony, and three villages. The only contributory burgh, or that which in conjunction with others is represented in the senate, belonging to the county is Dumbarton; it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow in returning one member to the Imperial Parliament. The present member for the county is Archibald Orr Ewing, Esq. The parliamentary constituency for 1881-82 was 3,669. The lord-lieutenant of the county is H. Ewing Crum-Ewing, Esq. of Strathleven. According to the census returns for 1871 the population of the shire was 58,557, and by those for 1881 75,337. At the latter date there were 14,250 inhabited houses, 1,238 uninhabited, and 191 building.

BONHILL,

ALEXANDRIA, BALLOCH, JAMESTOWN, KILMARONOCK RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BONHILL is a thriving little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles w. from Edinburgh, 18 n.w. from Glasgow, 3 n. from Dumbarton, and within one mile of the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond; situated on the east side of the Leven, and connected with Alexandria by an iron suspension bridge. Very considerable business is done here in calico-printing; and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well-built street; about the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church a fine building, of Gothic architecture, with a square tower, containing a handsome clock; it was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. A Free church, erected in 1844, is an elegant building of red freestone, with a tapering spire. It occupies a commanding site, a little to the south of the parish church. On a gentle eminence near the new bridge is an United Presbyterian church, erected in 1830. In 1836 a fine suspension bridge of iron was thrown over the Leven; the span is 438 feet, and its cost, with the approaches, £2,200, which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, of Bonhill. The inhabitants have tried of late to do away with the charge for crossing (one halfpenny), but have failed in the attempt. The land on both sides of the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which, together with respectable residences and recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February for horses. Population of the town in 1871, 2,510, and in 1881, 2,983.

BALLOCH is situated at the south end of Loch Lomond, and about a mile north-west from Bonhill; it is the terminus of the North British Railway. In 1832, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, erected an elegant suspension bridge across the Leven water, previous to which passengers were greatly inconvenienced by the ferry then in use. This bridge is twenty miles from Glasgow, by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. Balloch Hotel is beautifully situated at the foot of the "Queen of the Scottish Lakes," and at an easy distance from the railway station. A fair is held at Balloch on the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in April for horses, cattle and hirelings, and on the 15th of September for the sale of horses—the latter being the largest fair in Scotland. Population in 1871, 304, and in 1881, 112.

KILMARONOCK is a small parish adjoining that of Bonhill, and is situated a little to the north-east of that village. It contains nothing worthy of note but the parish church and Board school. An United Presbyterian church and school are likewise in the parish. Population in 1871, 978.

ALEXANDRIA is an increasing and considerable village, on the west side of the Leven, opposite to Bonhill. On the banks of the river are several extensive print works. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthful and pleasant. The village consists of several well-built streets. About a mile from the village stands Tullichevan Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of James Campbell, Esq., from which an extensive view of the river, and of the vale through which it winds, is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria is the neat mansion of Broomeley; which is also the property of the same gentleman, and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful residence of Patrick B. Smollett, Esq. The places of worship here are one of the Establishment, a Free church, and a chapel each for the United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. There is also a good Board school. A handsome public hall is centrally situated, at the bridge end. Population in 1871, 4,650, and in 1881, 6,616.

RENTON is also a large village in the parish of Cardross, one mile s.w. from Bonhill, the like distance s. from Alexandria, and two n. from Dumbarton, most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the village; on its banks are two extensive print works. A monumental column, bearing a Latin inscription, is here erected to the memory of the celebrated historian, Tobias Smollett, who was born here. It is a round pillar of stone work, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected by the descendants of that talented individual. In the village is an Established church, two Free churches, and one belonging to the Reformed Presbyterians. In 1871 Renton had a population of 3,037, and in 1881, 4,205.

JAMESTOWN, with a population of 2,925 inhabitants, is a thriving modern village, a mile distant from Bonhill, on the road to Balloch; extensive calico printing works are in operation here. There is a neat church of the Establishment in the village.

CUMBERNAULD,

CONDORRET, DULLATUR, CASTLECAR, CROY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village in the parish of its name, 83 miles w. from Edinburgh, 29 e. from Dumbarton, 14 n.e. from Glasgow, 18 s. from Stirling, 9 w. from Falkirk, 7 e. from Kirkintilloch, and 7 n. from Airdrie; situate on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of railway between Glasgow and Edinburgh. The weaving of checks and other striped fabrics, by hand-loom, for the Glasgow manufacturers, is carried on here, but the staple business of the district is mining, there being several coal and lime works and many quarries of good freestone in the neighbourhood. The parish church is at the west end of the village, occupying a commanding site, and embosomed among trees; there is also a commodious Free church, erected in 1826. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription newsroom. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House. The annual fair is held on the second Thursday in May for cattle, horses, &c. The parish of Cumbernauld has an area of 11,635 statute acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 3,556; of this number the village claimed 1,193; in 1881 the parish contained 4,270, and the village 1,064.

CONDORRET is a small village in the parish of and about three miles west from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the coal and ironstone mines and quarries situated here, although some are still engaged in hand-loom weaving. Population in 1871, 565, and in 1881, 715.

CASTLECAR is a small hamlet situated about two miles n.e. of Cumbernauld, but in the county of Stirling. Croy is also a small village in the same county, and distant from Cumbernauld about three miles. There is a station at each of the above places on the North British railway.

POST OFFICE, CUMBERNAULD, Christina Shaw, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from all parts (from Glasgow) at forty-five minutes past eight morning and forty-five minutes past two afternoon, and are despatched thereto at forty minutes past six morning and forty minutes past four afternoon.

The nearest Money Order Office is at KILSYTH, 3½ miles distant.

DUMBARTON,

WITH CARDROSS, DALREOCH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON is a royal burgh, the capital of the county and of the parish to which it gives name; 59 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 n.w. from Glasgow, 8 s.e. from Helensburgh, and 3 s. from Bonhill, situated in the parishes of Cardross and Dumbarton, and on a low piece of ground encompassed on its western quarter by the Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Firth, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloven into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to the height of more than 300 feet. The fortress is entered by a gate at the bottom, and within the rampart which defends the entrance to the guardhouse and lodging for the officers, from whence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, and a reservoir always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of military and functionaries. The house of the governor is judiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic. The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bode's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail. Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the rivers Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year Parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 marks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity, with a session of all recovered lands. The burgh has greatly improved since 1855, when the Harbour and Police Acts were adopted; the present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form around the head or west end of the peninsula; there are some by thoroughfare lanes and detached houses, and a suburb on the west side of the Leven, leading to Benton; it is connected with the latter by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching 300 feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious dock are being constructed. A pier of pitch pine has through the exertions of Provost Bennett been erected at a cost of £8,000. It extends seven hundred and sixty-five feet from the base of the Castle rock, southwards, towards the channel of the river Clyde; the gangway is six hundred and forty feet in length and fifteen feet broad, and the pier head is ninety feet long and twenty-five feet wide. The depth of the river at the extremity of the pier head is ten feet at low water, so that steamers are able to touch at the pier at all states of the tide. The pier, which is the property of the Dumbarton corporation was opened on the 8th of May, 1875. The streets, shops and houses are lighted with gas supplied by the corporation. The town is plentifully supplied with water, from the Long Craigs, and the drainage is being rapidly completed. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass, but that branch was extinguished by the death, in 1851, of all the principal proprietors of the works. The discontinuance of this source of industry proved a serious drawback upon the previous prosperity of the town, for when these works were in active operation they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 15,000 tons of coal, besides employing 10,000 tons of shipping, and paid from £40,000 to £50,000 excise duties per annum; the property is now in other hands, and the engineering establishment of Messrs. Denny & Co. occupies a portion of the premises. The principal trade, and on which the prosperity of the town chiefly depends, is that of ship building, which is carried on here extensively and with great spirit, and at which about three thousand men are employed. There are four extensive yards. Brewing, tanning, ironfounding, and sail and rope making, are also carried on to a limited extent. In High street are branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited—the latter a splendid stone building, erected at a cost of £30,000. Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II. in the year 1231; and its privileges (including its right of fishing in the Leven) were confirmed by a charter from James VI. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and eleven councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Tuesday and Friday during session, the sheriff small debt court every Tuesday during the session, and on vacation court days. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in March, May and August, and last Tuesday in October. The burgh unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow in returning one member to Parliament. Kilmarnock is the returning burgh. The original County and Burgh buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £50,000; the accommodation being found inadequate, in 1863 the interior was entirely reconstructed, and two spacious wings also added, thereby giving ample accommodation, at a cost of £5,170. They form a noble structure, and contain convenient court rooms, with every suitable office; the gaol is placed at the rear of the court house. A combination poor house was completed in 1865, at a cost of about £7,000; it is situated on the outskirts of the town, in a healthy and pleasant locality.

At the east end of High street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was perfected in 1811, at a cost of £5,000. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, an Episcopal church—a splendid stone edifice, erected in 1873 at the east end of High street and Church square—and an Established church at Dalroch, a handsome new stone building. A mission hall has been erected at a cost of £500, situated in Church street; there are also Wesleyan Methodist, Baptist and Roman Catholic chapels. All that remains of the ancient Collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Duchess of Albany and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Patrick, is one of the tower arches, which has been removed and placed at the entrance of the late Burgh school, in Church street, the original site being required for the formation of the Dumbartonshire railway, which passes in the immediate vicinity of this once extensive pile. The principal educational establishment is the Burgh Academy, a truly eminent institution of long standing. The late building proving insufficient for the growing requirements of the town, a much larger and really handsome erection was provided, through the liberality of the council and inhabitants. The style is French Gothic of the thirteenth century, the building presenting a frontage of 132 feet, adorned by a beautifully ornamented central tower 140 feet high. In the rear of the Academy is a large public hall, embracing every convenience, and capable of accommodating an audience of about 750. The expense of erection of both buildings was about £6,000. There are also two Board schools created at considerable expense, and an Episcopalian school, a handsome stone building, constructed upon the newest and most improved system, situated in Risk street; the cost, including the grounds, was £5,000, and was defrayed by Richard D. Buchanan, Esq., Auchentorlie, Bowling. There are two weekly newspapers established here, the Dumbarton Herald and the Lennox Herald. A Mechanics' Institute, situate in Church street, contains a good circulating library. The markets, entitled to be held on Tuesdays and Fridays, are now but thinly attended. The Agricultural Society, under the presidency of the Duke of Montrose, have a show of live stock at Dumbarton annually in June. The fairs are of some importance; they are held on the third Tuesday in March, the Thursday next before Easter, the third Tuesday in May, the second Tuesday in August, and the second Tuesday in November, besides a very large cattle fair held on Carman Moor on the first Wednesday in June. Population of Dumbarton in 1871, 11,429, and in 1881, 13,785.

CARDROSS is a small but respectable village in the parish of its name, situate four miles from Dumbarton, on the road to Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the Reformation, the church of Cardross was a rectory, belong to the Cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsula promontory formed by the Leven and the Clyde; the present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower. This district is very pleasant and salubrious, and the situation of the parish eligible for business. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many respectable families, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery. The parochial school here, likewise a Free church, is a handsome stone building. The North British railway have a station here. On Castle hill are the remains of the residence of Robert Bruce, from whence he could behold his army encamped below. Population of the parish in 1871, 7,089, and in 1881, 5,881.

CLYDEN, GARELOCHHEAD, RAHANE, ROSENEATH, GLENFRUIN, SHANDON, COVE AND KILCREGGAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony and sea port in the parish of Row, 25 miles W.W. from Glasgow, 9 s. from Luss, and 8 N.W. from Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which place it is five miles distant. The town, which is a perpetual fien from Sir James Colquhoun Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777, and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable watering place on the Clyde; it now consists of a series of handsome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and improved plan. The accommodation for visitors is equal to that of most watering places; numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families or individuals resorting thither in the summer. There is a superior and convenient hotel, called the Imperial, opposite the pier, and another some distance east of the town, called the Queen's. A public library, circulating libraries, and reading rooms are also in the town. The quay, erected in 1817, and in 1861 greatly enlarged, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river; but, being low, a great portion of it is covered at high water. About a mile and a half west of the town, at the entrance to the Gare Loch, an excellent and substantial quay has been constructed by Sir James Colquhoun. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, eight councillors, a treasurer, and a town clerk. A justice of the peace court is held on the last Saturday of each month. Helensburgh was erected a quoad sacra parish in 1862, and the places of worship are the parish church, an Episcopal and two Free churches; also chapels for United Presbyterians, Independents and Baptists. A Board school with several respectable boarding academies are amongst the educational establishments in the town. At the distance of two miles, in a westerly direction, is Roseneath Castle, a seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyll; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situate Ardencaple Castle, the birth-place of the present Duke of Argyll. A portion of the castle is of ancient date, but the greater part is comparatively of modern erection. It commands a fine view of the Clyde and Gare Loch, which flows between these splendid mansions, to a distance of seven miles into the mainland; and in the vicinity of the town, near the banks of the Clyde, are several handsome seats and residences. The following public buildings are worthy of note:—The Public Hall in King street is a neat stone structure; the new hospital in King street, erected at a cost of £3,000, contains under one roof a fever hospital, a hospital for infectious diseases, and one for non-infectious cases, or casualty ward, each having a separate entrance and distinct airing grounds. The Bank of Scotland, Limited, situated in West Clyde street, is a very handsome stone building; in the baronial style of architecture, erected at a cost of £3,000; the Union Bank, Limited, in Colquhoun square, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, in Colquhoun street, are also both handsome stone structures. A new park, opened to the public through the liberality of William Kid-ton, Esq., and the late Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., is situated at the foot of the Gare Loch, and commands a fine view of Roseneath Castle and the surrounding scenery. In the neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for twenty five years the celebrated and scientific Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels. The first trip ever made by steamboat in this division of the globe was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh, by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer; he was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow, April 7th, 1767, died at his house (now the Queen's Hotel), in Helensburgh, November 14th, 1830, and was interred in the parish churchyard of Row, where has been erected a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits conferred by him upon his species, by rendering subservient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully "combats the fickle wind and stems the flowing tide;" there is also a handsome granite obelisk on the esplanade, which has been erected to his memory. A market is held on Thursdays, weekly. A fair is held here on the second Tuesday in February and on the 12th November, for cattle; the fairs formerly held on the 1st of June and 6th of August are discontinued, though authorised by charter. In 1871 Helensburgh had a population of 5,975 persons, and in 1881, 7,585.

Row is a small romantic village in the parish of its name, situated on the eastern margin of the Gare Loch, and about two miles west from Helensburgh. The parish of Row is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character, and the low grounds are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands in the village, near the ferry across Gare Loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projecting into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word Rhu signifying a point. The parish, exclusive of a narrow strip on Loch Long, is about six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by Luss on the east, Helensburgh on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch, and its south end is washed by the Firth of Clyde. Population of the parish in 1871, 8,439, and in 1881, 10,097.

SHANDON, about three miles north of Row, is a district containing some fine villas and mansions, and a Hydropathic Establishment much frequented during the summer months. A little to the north of Shandon is FASLANE, where are the ruins of an old chapel, surrounded by the remains of an ancient churchyard.

GARELOCH VILLAGE, about six miles beyond Row, is prettily situated at the head of a loch, a screen of hills rising behind separates the Gareloch-head from Loch Long. The interesting and beautiful GLENFRUIN is approached from here. This romantic place is studded with many seats of the gentry, who make this neighbourhood their favourite resort from June to September. Facing the pier, where the pleasure steamers arrive and depart, stands the Garelochhead Hotel, in the occupation of Mr. Angus Cameron, where every comfort and accommodation can be obtained. About a mile and a half on the road to Arrochar, on an eminence called "Whistlefield," splendid views may be had of Lochs Goil and Long and the Gare Loch. Population in 1871, 364.

ROSENEATH is a parish occupying the peninsula of that name, extending for about seven miles from east to west, and from one to four broad. The parish church, a small but neat modern edifice, is within a quarter of a mile of the ferry and pier, and the parochial school is adjacent. Roseneath Castle, already noticed, is the principal object of interest. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,730, and in 1881, 1,934.

About two miles over the hills is the modern village of KILCREGGAN, and a mile farther west, at the entrance to Loch Long, is the kindred village of COVE; both are resorted to for sea bathing, and consist of a series of villas and mansions extending for some miles along the shore; at each is a pier for the convenience of passing steamers. The places of worship are an Established church and United Presbyterian chapel; a Free church is likewise in the neighbourhood.

KILPATRICK,

DUNTOCHER, DALMUIR, BOWLING, HARDGATE, LITTLE MILL, DUNGLASS, CLYDE BANK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

KILPATRICK is a post village, in the parish of its name, 53 miles w. from Edinburgh, 10 w. from Glasgow, and 5 e. from Dumbarton, situated on the road between the two last named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. The name Kilpatrick signifies the "Church of Patrick," but in this case tradition varies from fact, the former authority stating it to be the "cell," while the latter proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite; it is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birthplace of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland. The traditionary record asserts that, at the age of sixteen, this individual was carried off from this then civilised Roman district by a band of Irish marauders, who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the "Ecclesia Hibernica" distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital. The visit strengthened the connection that had priorly existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the village has not the advantage of any manufactory. At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a handsome square tower and clock, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village is a Free church and an United Presbyterian church, together with a Board school. HARDGATE is a village in the above parish. Acreage, 12,554. Population of the parish in 1881, 8,768, of this number the village contained 910.

At LITTLE MILL, a mile to the west, is a distillery and a ship building yard; and situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde and adjacent country, is Milton House, the residence of Andrew Muter, Esq.

At DUNGLASS, half a mile west of Little Mill, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification, or Roman boundary, and at BOWLING BAY, about midway between Duglass and Kilpatrick, commences the Forth and Clyde canal, which, after thirty-nine miles eastern traverse, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German Ocean with the western channel. This great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th of July, 1790. Vessels drawing eight feet of water, having a nineteen feet beam, and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble national junction.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, situated two miles north from Kilpatrick. It contains three large mills for spinning and manufacturing cotton, which were kept in active operation by the late Alexander Dunn, Esq., of Duntocher, up to the period of his death, shortly after which the cotton mills were closed, pending the question of succession being settled. The principal part of the town is lighted with gas. The Established church was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700. The other places of worship are a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel; there is also a Board school—a handsome stone building—and a Roman Catholic school. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

"PONT. HUNC. EXIT.
RUL. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
EL. ANTONIN. HADR.
AUG. P. P. QUINT. LOLL.
URBIC. LEG. FRE. COL.
LAPSUM. RESTITUIT.
DOMINUS DE BLANTYNE.
IRE. A. ER. CHR.
M.D. CC. LXXII."

which is thus translated:—"This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Julius Antonianus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant; being almost ruinous it was restored by Lord Blantyne in the year 1772." A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch tower, visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestige of them now remains. Population in 1881, 1,594.

DALMUIR is a small village about one and a half miles from Duntocher; near to this village Messrs. J. & C. Thomson have erected a large ship building yard and engineering works, which cover thirty acres of land, and employ about 2,000 men. Population of Dalmuir in 1881, 1,973.

KIRKINTILLOCH,

LENZIE, WATERSIDE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKINTILLOCH (formerly Kirkintullock) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, 40 miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.w. from Stirling, 16 s. from Dumbarton, the like distance w. from Falkirk, 7 n. from Glasgow, the like distance w. from Cumbernauld, 5 s.w. from Kilsyth, 3 s.e. from Campsie, and 5 from Campsie Glen. It is situated on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin; and is understood to derive its name from the locality, the original designation being Carpentullock, signifying in Cambro-British the fort on the head or end of the hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the banks of the Kelvin. The wall of Antonius passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little south-west of the parish church; the site of a fortress is even to this day recognised by a deep moat called "Peel." Kirkintilloch (which is the largest parish in the shire) and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here, but not to so great an extent as formerly, the inhabitants being now chiefly employed at the different chemical and iron works on the canal bank. There are also coal and ironstone mines in the neighbourhood. The monetary transactions of the burgh are facilitated by branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking the Forth and Clyde canal, passing through the town, affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coast of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch Railway, which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochnie Railway about a mile from that town, has its terminus here; this line also joins the Garnkirk and Glasgow Railway. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile and a half south of the town, and at this place is known as LENZIE JUNCTION. Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony; its first charter was conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cumming, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town was formerly governed by a senior and junior magistrate, otherwise bailies, ten councillors, treasurer, and town clerk, but in 1871 the inhabitants adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862, and their affairs are now administered by a body of twelve police commissioners. Gas works were erected by a private company for lighting the place, but were acquired by the town under the Burgh Gas Supply Act, 1876. The court house and gaol, which form a substantial building at the cross, is ornamented with a tower and spire, containing a four-faced clock. Burgh police courts are held fortnightly, or more frequently if occasion requires. The magistrates act also as Dean of Guild, in erection of new buildings, &c.; justice of peace courts are held only as may be required, and a sheriff small debt circuit court on the first Thursday in March, June, September, and December. The parish church, which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship in Kirkintilloch comprise the quoad sacra parish church of St. David's, two Free churches, one United Presbyterian, a Methodist, and a Roman Catholic chapel.

In LENZIE there are an Established church, an Union (Free and U.P.) and the Episcopal church. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, and October 30th for cattle and horses. The following public institutions in the neighbourhood are worthy of special notice, viz.:—The Barony Parish Lunatic Asylum, at Woodilee, Lenzie, in connection with the Barony Parish, Glasgow, was opened on 22nd October, 1875. The style of the extensive buildings is Elizabethan, the architects being Messrs. James Salmon and Son. The whole range is over 700 feet long and 450 broad, and they occupy about 6½ acres of ground. Their cost has been £150,000. The estate altogether extends to 383 acres, at a cost of over £30,000, making a total £180,000, and was bought by the Barony Parochial Board, in 1852, at the price of £56 per acre. The principal external features of the Asylum are two massive and handsome towers, each rising to a height of 150 feet from the centre of the building, and a very elegant fleche which surmounts the chapel which is seated for 400 persons. Its principal window is fitted with three divisions of stained glass, representing Faith, Hope, and Charity, the work of Mr. Ballantyne, of Edinburgh. The dining hall is also a very commodious apartment. In it 500 persons can be supplied at one sitting. The recreation hall, on the second flat of the building, is a room about 90 feet long by 60 feet at the broadest part, and is fitted with a spacious platform for musical and dramatic entertainments. There are in all 110 single rooms and dormitory accommodation for 500 other patients. The administrative department is so arranged that it can be easily extended so as to provide for 800 or 1,000 patients. The Glasgow Convalescent Home is situated at Lenzie, about half a mile to the south-east of the Railway station, and is capable of containing 63 patients. The subscribers to the Home have the privilege of recommending the general public as patients. The Broomhill Home, for the relief of incurables for Glasgow and the West of Scotland, is situated at Kirkintilloch, and spends for the aid of such persons in their own homes £100 a month. The entire parish of Kirkintilloch comprises an area of 7,148 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 8,357, and in 1881 10,590; the town at the latter period had of this number 7,500.

ARROCHAR, TARBEIT (LOCH LOMOND), INVERARNAN, INVERNSNAID, ROWARDENNAN, ARDLUI, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village, in the parish of its name, 69 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 28 N.W. from Glasgow, 18 N.W. from Dumbarton, 10 N.W. from Bonhill, and 9 N. from Helensburgh; most delightfully situated on the western margin of the justly-famed Loch Lomond. The only business of consequence is the Camstradden and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond and down the river Leven. If healthiness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss; but that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble loch, on the margin of whose pellucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible, heighten the interest of this charming spot. Steamboats sail every day (Sunday excepted), from the south end of the loch, calling at Balmaha, Luss, Tarbet, Inverarnan, the foot of Ben Lomond, &c., returning the same afternoon. Here resided the Rev. and learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language; and on the opposite side of the loch near Drymen, lived for a considerable time Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Stronehill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About two and a half miles south from Luss is Rossdu House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss. It is a handsome building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church was dedicated to Saint Mackessog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stones was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelary saint of this part of the country. A fair is held here on the third Tuesday in August. Acreage, 24,206. In 1871 the parish contained a population of 700.

ARROCHAR (more properly Arrochar) is a parish lying between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly sixteen miles in length by three in breadth. The village, which is situated at the head of Loch Long, is ten miles north from Luss, and about one and a half west from Tarbet. Acreage, 25,858. Population in 1871, 525.

TARBET is a much famed inn and small village on Loch Lomond, about eight miles north from Luss, and, to distinguish it from Tarbet, on Loch Fyne, in Argyleshire, is generally designated Tarbet-on-Loch or the Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or "the cobbler," is best seen near to the inn. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about one mile and a half, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such that a person may leave Glasgow, proceed by rail to Balloch, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbet, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long, and up the Clyde. The Inverarnan Hotel is situated at the head of the loch, one mile and a half from ARDLUX, the latter place being the terminus of the Loch Lomond steamers.

NEW KILPATRICK,

MILNGAVIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW (or East) KILPATRICK is a parish partly in this county, and partly in that of Stirlingshire; its extent is upwards of six miles from north to south, by a breadth of from two to four miles, and contains 12,051 acres. The Forth and Clyde canal intersects it in its northern part, entering the district on crossing the Kelvin, by a stupendous aqueduct bridge. The district was separated from Old Kilpatrick, which bounds the parish on the west, in the year 1649. The church is six miles north-west from Glasgow, and is a neat building, erected in 1807. Garscube House, the residence of Lady Campbell, is the principal seat in the neighbourhood worthy of notice. Population of New Kilpatrick parish in 1871, 6,038, and in 1881, 7,431.

MILNGAVIE (popularly Milngay) is a thriving manufacturing village, and the principal one in the parish of New Kilpatrick, but locally situated in the county of Stirling, 12 miles E. from Dumbarton, 5 E.

from Duntocher, 21 s.w. from Stirling, 7 N.N.W. from Glasgow, 51 w. from Edinburgh, and 2 miles from New Kilpatrick. In the village is a large printworks, and in the neighbourhood are two bleach fields, a dye works, and a distillery. There is an United Presbyterian church, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Chapel of Ease; the parish church is two miles to the south. The country around is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many respectable family mansions. St. Mugdock Castle, two and a half miles north, is a remarkable echo; also a small beautiful loch, on the margin of which is an eminence, crowned with an observatory. There is a druidical temple about three miles north-east on Craigmaddie Moor, near the remains of Craigmaddie Castle, called the "Old Wife's Lits"; it consists of three immense stones, two of which are erect and support the third.

POST OFFICE, MILNGAVIE, Walter Weir, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at ten minutes before seven and five minutes past seven morning and twenty minutes past five evening, and are despatched thereto at three minutes before nine morning, and at twenty minutes before four, twenty minutes before six and eight evening.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire in the south of Scotland, bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk on the north-west by Ayrshire, on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright, on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Frith, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburghshire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly fifty-five miles, and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peebleshire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys it embraces an area of 1,103 square miles, or 705,946 statute acres of land.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgove, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the river Dee, in Galloway; these people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries; during the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantyre effected a settlement, and from these intermixtures sprang the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cambria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the country was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursions and reckless feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out under Charles I., the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrection. Attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families; and humbler causes have conspired to extinguish many names of great local interest. The Maxwells were completely ruined by the attainer of the Earl of Nithsdale, in 1715. The Douglasses of Queensberry and the Johnstons of Annandale have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Buccleuch has risen to the greatest prosperity and influence of any family in the south of Scotland. From being thus so frequently subjected to the horrors of early invasion and predatory warfare, and being so partitioned into baronies, the shire exhibits, even to this day, the remains of some very important castles and places of security.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow or white sandstone, with dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the lands; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions; marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes, and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlock Head, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts of the south of Scotland, there is a very general mixture of arable and pasture land. The upper part of the shire, or Annandale, Eskdale and Ewesdale, is principally devoted to sheep-feeding; in the lower portion the farms are larger and more adapted to agriculture, the plantations and pleasure grounds are consequently more numerous, and are remarkable for their beauty and richness.

The following are the principal eminences in Dumfries-shire, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—

In Annandale the improvement in the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meeting some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers and bullocks are exhibited. The number of oxen, sheep and pigs nurtured in this county is invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; and exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place—and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having greatly improved within the last sixty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous a state as those of any other district of Scotland. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county; the principal branches under this head are the manufacture of hoisery goods, tweeds and cotton spinning; the chief seat of the former is limited to the capital of the county; the last to the town of Annan.

RIVERS, &c.—The chief, indeed the only, rivers of consequence are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk. From these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncove hill, in the parish of Kirkcudbright, and descends into the valley of Sangubar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchar from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith, a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Frith. Near to Jarborough Castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds called "Bow-butts," where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practise archery. The river Annan (as well as the Tweed and the Clyde) takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in this course it receives the Evan and Moffat waters and the Wamprey stream, which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name; passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Loch Maben it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous; the Esk in its progress through the district is joined by the Black Esk, the Maggot, the Ewes, and the Wauchope—(almost the whole of the division belongs to the noble family of Buccleuch); after reaching Broomholm, the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Frith; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddel from Roxburghshire, and the Lime water from the county of Cumberland; the entire length of its race is about thirty-eight miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries, receiving in Scotland the appellation of "Firths;" its waters are shallow, and have long, sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and that is particularly the case during the spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the South west, and borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned, when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—even the most experienced persons are liable to be overtaken by the tides, when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety. The principal lines of RAILWAY now in operation are the Glasgow and South Western, and the Caledonian, with their branches.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATION.—The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a Sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcudbright; the district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdiction. Up to the era of the Reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-three parishes, which are divided into five presbyteries and one synod. There are four royal burghs in the county—Dumfries, Annan, Sangubar, and Lochmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerbie, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Moniaive. The shire at large sends one member to Parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcudbright in returning another representative. The present member for the county is Robert Jardine, Esq. of Castlemilk. The parliamentary constituency for 1881-82 numbered 3,469. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Dalkeith, K.T. According to the census returns for 1871, the population of the county was 74,809, and by those for 1881, 76,124. The number of houses inhabited in the shire at the last named period was 15,656; uninhabited, 895; in course of erection, 100.

BRIDEKIRK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ANNAN, the capital of the district of Annandale and of its parish, is an ancient royal burgh, 79 miles s. of Edinburgh, 87 s.e. of Glasgow, 43 n.e. of Kirkcaldy, 27 s. of Moffat, 16 s.e. of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan, situated on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Firth, and upon the Glasgow and South Western and Caledonian railways, for which lines there are stations. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic word An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Veromum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruins, and the original wall formed part of the gaol and old town hall. Upon the death of David II., in 1371, this castle, Lochmaben, and the lordship of Annandale, came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went with his sister Agnes to the Dunbars, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglasses, who lost it by similar conduct; and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebellion against his brother, King James III., and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1481, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the King, and became the great key to the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI., of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V., dated 1st of March, 1538, which stated that Annan had with other towns been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1293, when they entered Annandale and burned the town with its church. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and fifteen councillors, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and a town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Sanquhar, Lochmaben, and Kirkcudbright in returning one member to Parliament. The port or harbour of Annan is free, and vessels of 250 tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town; at this place are wooden wharves or jetties. It is in contemplation to make a dock at the waterfoot, a bill having been last year (1881) presented to Parliament for that purpose, and also to give the railway companies power to extend their lines to the dock when finished. It will add greatly to the importance of the surrounding district, but more particularly to the port of Annan. Vessels generally make the passage between Annan and Liverpool within 12 hours, that is, in one tide only, from harbour to harbour. The convenience afforded by the rapidity of communication with Liverpool has greatly increased the trade, and a considerable quantity of bacon, grain, live stock, and other commodities are conveyed to and from the Liverpool market. Among the other branches of trade are those of tanning, bacon curing, also a large bone grinding mill, owned by Messrs. T. & G. Tweedie; these works give employment to a number of hands; there is also a distillery a short distance from the town, up the river. In 1879 a working men's reading and recreation room and temperance coffee palace was opened by the Marchioness of Queensberry, who was also the promoter. Branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, and the Bank of Scotland, Limited, are settled here; there is also a Bank for savings. Limestone and freestone are abundant in many parts of the parish, which has been long famed for the superior quality of the potatoes cultivated within it. Annan of late years has been much improved by new streets and buildings, and now possesses a very handsome town hall, built on the site of the old town hall, High street, at a cost of upwards of £4,000. The old bridge, consisting of five arches, was removed in 1826, and a neat and substantial bridge erected on its site, towards which a grant of £3,000 was obtained from Government, and the remainder supplied by the county. On the west are the town hall and market place, and at the east end of the town is a fine church, built of stone, with a tower and spire. A Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels are the other places of worship. Parochial and industrial and several private schools are well conducted, but the principal educational establishment is a classical academy; the building, a very handsome one, was erected in 1820; in it is taught most of the elegant and all the useful branches of education, and the preceptors consist of classical and other masters, and teachers in the several branches. Annan is proud of being the birthplace of the Rev. Edward Irving, founder of that section of Christians called Irvingites, and Hugh Clapperton, the African traveller.

The town is now plentifully supplied with water. The reservoir in which the water for the use of the town is stored is situated on the farm of Purdomstown, in the parish of Middlebie, situated about 7½ miles from Annan. It has a capacity for holding 27,000,000 gallons. The filter bed and supply tank is behind Landheads toll bar, 2 miles from the town, and is able to pass 150,000 gallons per day. The ceremony of opening the water works was performed by Lady Augusta Noel, wife of Ernest Noel, Esq., M.P. for the Dumfries district of burghs, on July 21st, 1881. The total cost was about £12,000. Messrs. Brebner & Fleming, Edinburgh, were the contractors.

An excellent newspaper, the Annandale Observer, is published every Friday, of which Messrs. William Cuthbertson & Son, High street, are the proprietors. The market is held on Friday, at which, during the season, large quantities of pork are sold. There are also two cattle marts, at which, perhaps, more cattle are sold than at any market in Dumfries-shire. There are fairs on the first Friday in May, the first Friday in August, and the third Friday in October. The acreage of the parish is about 12,048. The population of the parish in 1871 was 5,240, and in 1881, 4,936, the town containing over 3,400 of that number.

BRIDEKIRK is a modern village, 3 miles N. of Annan, situated on the west bank of the Annan river. The proprietor was the late Mrs. General Dirom, through whose interest it was erected into a quoad sacra parish in May, 1836, and the same lady built the church in 1835. The remains of Bridekirk are in this parish. Population in 1871, 340, and in 1881, 702.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH,

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANKEND, KELTON, GLENCAPLE QUAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of CAERLAVEROCK occupies a sort of peninsular formed by the Solway Firth, the river Nith, and Lochar water. The magnificent ruin of Caerlaverock Castle stands on a level plain, between eight and nine miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western Marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I. in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress and fell into decay. It now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. Lord Herries is the owner of nearly the whole parish. The places of worship comprise two churches, one of the Establishment at Caerlaverock, and one of the Free church at Glencaple Quay. There are three endowed schools in the parish. The parish contains about 18,321 acres. The population of Caerlaverock parish in 1871 was 1,151, and in 1881, 1,046.

BANKEND is a clean pleasant village, about seven miles from Dumfries, containing a parochial and grammar school, which is also a boarding academy.

GLENCAPLE QUAY, on the banks of the Nith, in this parish, is a clean neat little village, wherein former times numbers of coasting traders discharged and took in their cargoes for various parts of the United Kingdom, and passengers from Liverpool usually landed here. It is now chiefly used as a bathing place, to which it is extensively resorted in summer time. KELTON is likewise a small sea-port village on the Nith.

POST OFFICE. GLENCAPLE, Mary Richardson, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from Dumfries at half-past eight morning, and are despatched at half-past four afternoon.

Post Office, BANKEND, James Gibson, Post Master.—Letters arrive from Dumfries at forty-five minutes past eight morning, and are despatched thereto at five minutes past four afternoon.

CLOSEBURN,

GLENCAIRN, DUNREGGAN, MONIAIVE, KIRKMICHAEL AND TYNRON.

CLOSEBURN is an inland parish in the district of Nithsdale; it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about ten miles in length by about eleven and a half in breadth, and contains about 29,103 acres. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of Sir James Stewart Monteath, Bart. form an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls. Within two miles of the castle are some caverns, in one of which latter the hunted Covenanters used to take up their abode to evade pursuit; and it is considered to be the place alluded to by the author of "Waverley" in his description of the cave occupied by Balfour of Burley. The most prominent architectural feature in the parish is the baronial mansion, Closeburn Hall, a large and splendid Grecian edifice. A school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish; it is placed under the government of the presbytery of Penpont, and in it all the children of the parish are taught the elements of education. Mr. John Stephens, M.A. is the master. Near Closeburn Castle is a strong sulphurous spring of the same character as Moffatt Well. There is also another called Townsclough Well, which is chalybeate, being strongly impregnated with iron. The population of the united parishes of Closeburn and Dalgarno in 1871 was 1,612, and in 1881, 1,511.

The large parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends eleven miles in length, by from three to five in breadth, containing about 39,083 acres. All the western and northern divisions are mountainous and pastoral. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, &c. which the elegant mansion and grounds of Colonel Walker contribute greatly. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name. The church is situate at a short distance from the site of an older edifice. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,749, and in 1881, 1,742.

DUNREGGAN is a small well-built village in the parish of Glencairn, five miles and a half south-east of Penpont, situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat Water, where it is crossed by a bridge to MONIAIVE, a small but pleasant village in the same parish as Dunreggan, sixteen miles from Dumfries. The business of Moniaive is rather of a domestic nature, and chiefly supported by the many gentry and respectable farmers of the surrounding neighbourhood.

POST OFFICE, CLOSEBURN, William Coltart, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Thornhill) at eight morning, and are despatched at twenty minutes past four afternoon.

The nearest Money Order Office is at THORNHILL.

Post Office, AULDGIRTH, John Smith, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Dumfries) at half-past eight morning, and are despatched at forty-five minutes past three afternoon.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

Post Office, MONIAIVE, Thomas Corrie, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Thornhill) at nine morning, and are despatched at four afternoon.

Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

The Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch established here, which fully supplies the monetary requirements of the village. There are also two respectable inns, the Craighdarroch Arms and the George, several good shops, and also two good schools in connection with the Established and Free churches. Moniaive is a place of some antiquity, and formerly of more consequence than it now is, having been a burgh of barony, chartered in the reign of Charles I. It was in this district that several martyrs suffered at the time of the Reformation, and in this neighbourhood may be seen various but decent testimonials to their memory. One very handsome monument, erected on an eminence near the village of Moniaive, bears the following inscription:—"In memory of the late Rev. James Renwick, the last who suffered death for attachment to the covenanted cause of Christ in Scotland; born near this spot, 15th Feby. 1662, and executed at the Grass Market, Edinburgh, 17th Feby. 1688. Erected by subscription, 1838." There is a library and a bowling green in the village. The population of Moniaive, including Dunreggan, was in 1871, 767, and in 1881, 676.

KIRKMICHAEL, united with Garren, in the district of Nithsdale, is about ten miles long and four broad, and contains about 16,983 acres. The parish of Kirkpatrick-juxta bounds it on the north-west, Johnstone on the north-east, Lochmaben on the south-east, Tinwald and Kirkmanse on the south, and Closeburn on the west. Many remains of ancient fortifications and Roman roads are visible in this district. A number of ancient coins and other small antiquities have been found beneath the soil. More than half of the parish belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, and the rest is distributed among several proprietors. The parish church is near the Ae river, which bounds the parish on the west, and which in 1871 had a population of 903, and in 1881, 843.

TYNRON parish lies between Penpont on the north and north-east, and Glencairn on the south, and extends nine miles in length, by a breadth of from two to three, with an acreage of about 15,683. It is watered partially by the Shinnel rivulet, along the banks of which there is some pleasing scenery. Near the eastern extremity of the parish rises the Doon of Tynron, a conspicuous pyramidal hill, near the summit of which is an ancient castle. A church stands on the site of the old structure. Population in 1871, 331, and in 1881, 416.

CUMMERTREES,

POWFOOT, DALTON, MOUSEWALD, RUTHWELL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village—the latter, clean and neat, is 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, the same distance s.e. of Glasgow, 22 n.w. of Carlisle, 13 s.e. of Dumfries, 10 s.e. of Lochmaben, the same distance s. from Lockerbie, 6 from Ecclefechan, and 4 from Annan, situated on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, for which line there is a station at the village. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, containing about 9,466 acres, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Frith. It is a flat, fertile, and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed.
The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village. About a mile southeast of Cummertrees is Powfoot, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,116, and in 1881, 1,068.

DALTON is a parish and small village between three and four miles from Cummertrees. The parish, which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth, with about 6,886 acres. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones to the memory of the Ross family, descendants of the ennobled house of Ross of Halkhead, who were long resident in this parish. Population of the parish in 1871, 57 and in 1881, 579.

MOUSEWALD is parish and village—the latter about six miles from Dumfries, lying between that town and Annan. The kirk, which is about a quarter of a mile from the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, long since laird of Mousewald. Population in 1871, 647, and in 1881, 553.

RUTHWELL is a parish and village—the latter about three miles from Cummertrees; this place is a barony, and is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants availed themselves of these rights. It was in early days celebrated for the manufacture of salt; but this art has not been practised for some time. Near the shore is the brow, well and hamlet, where Burns spent several of the last weeks of his existence. The kirk and mause of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from that village. The gardens of the manse, which are extensive and laid out with great taste, contain a very ancient Runic monument, in a good state of preservation. The parochial school is at CLARENCE-FIELD. About a mile from Ruthwell, in the parish of MOUSEWALD, is Mount Kedar, where a monument has been erected to the memory of the Rev. Henry Duncan, D.D., late minister of Ruthwell. The memorial, which is of stone, consists of an arched base and pyramid, forty feet in height; on the base an inscription states that he was the founder of the system of savings banks, and was born in 1774, and died in 1845, after being minister of Ruthwell parish for forty-four years, when he closed in communion with the Free Church of Scotland. A Free Church and school house are situated here. The parish of Ruthwell has an area of 8,693 acres, and contained a population in 1871 of 972, and in 1881, 868.

DORNOCK, GRAITNEY (OR GREटना),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DORNOCK is a parish and village—the latter a small one, in the district of Annandale, Dumfries-shire, 84 miles S. of Edinburgh, 18 s. of Langholm, 17 s.e. of Dumfries, 12 s.e. of Lockerbie, 7 s. of Ecclefechan, and 2 E. of Annan; situated on the high road from the latter town to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Firth, where there is good sea bathing. The parish which is about two miles and a half square, contains about 4,625 acres, and is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient erection called Stapleton Tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish. It is now the summer residence of John A. Critchley, Esq. Robgill Tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robgill, stands in the same parish, and with the lands attached are now possessed by Robert Paterson, Esq. At a short distance from the village there are the remains of a Roman military road and druidical circle or temple. On what was formerly a moor in the parish, a battle is traditionally said to have been fought between the English and Scotch, in which the former were defeated and their two commanders slain. Two stones in Dornock churchyard, each 6½ feet long and two broad, and raised in the middle like a coffin, mark the place of their reported interment. On these tombs hieroglyphics are cut, which have hitherto puzzled the antiquarian. The kirk and the parochial school are in the village. There is an Established church and two parochial schools in the parish. The population of the parish was in 1871, 826, and in 1881, 814.

GRAITNEY (more popularly called Greटना), is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish, the acreage of which is about 7,863, comprehends the old parishes of Greटना and Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Greटना, or Greटना Green, is situated on the road from Annan to Carlisle, by Longton, eight miles and a half from the former, and nine miles and a half from the latter town and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. The Glasgow and South Western and Caledonian Railways pass through the parish, and there is a station contiguous to the village. This place has long been noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages. Any person can perform the ceremony, which merely amounts to a declaration, before witnesses, that the parties are man and wife, such an acknowledgment being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland; by a certificate being subscribed by the officiating priest and witnesses, the union becomes quite indissoluble. The fee charged varies according to circumstances, and the means of the party, from half a guinea to £40, and even £50 has been paid. Bills were brought into the House of Lords to alter the law of Scottish marriages, and more especially the Greटना Green contracts, but they were not carried further than to require that if the parties belong to any other country, one of them must have resided 21 days in the kingdom of Scotland before they can be so joined together. The first of these convenient priests was a fisherman named Coulthard. He kept a ferry boat, before any high roads were made through the country. The following is the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, is furnished:—

"KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, COUNTY OF DUMFRIES, PARISH OF GREटना."

"These are to certify to all whom these presents may come, that A.B., from the parish of —, in the county of —, and C.D., from the parish of —, in the county of —, being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were this day married after the manner of the laws of the Church of England, and agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

"As witness our hands at Gretna Hall, &c., &c."

About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participated in this matrimonial trade. This village, as also that of Gretna, belongs to the Maxwell family. At SARKFOOT, about a mile from the latter village, is good bathing ground. About two miles west from Gretna is the small village of RIGG, where there is also a dissenting chapel. Population of the parish in 1871, 1,395, and in 1881, 1,213.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Grainity. The kirk and parochial school, which stand at the southern end of the parish, are about three miles from Gretna. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones, amongst others a sarcophagus, bearing a Latin inscription and eight shields of arms, to the memory of William Coulthart, chief of his name, who was resident in the parish till near the end of last century. About one mile from the village is Moss Knowe, the residence of Colonel William Graham, J.P., a very fine and stately mansion. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat. The Caledonian Railway, which runs through the village, has a station here. Population in 1871, 1,529, and in 1881, 1,461; acreage, 11,529.

DUMFRIES,

MAXWELLTOWN, TERREGLES, TROQUEER, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. of Edinburgh, 72 s.e. of Glasgow, 180 s. by w. of Aberdeen, 60 s.e. of Ayr, 82 n.w. of Carlisle (by railway), 15 n.w. of Annan, and 8 s.w. of Lochmaben: it is situated on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, and there is a station for the line about a quarter of a mile from the town, of which the Caledonian Railway Company have a portion. The branch of this company joins the main line at Lockerbie. Dumfries, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Firth, and is navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. There exists no record whereby to ascertain the date when the town was founded, or the etymology of its name—Drium-a-frish—Dun-fries—Drumfries and “Dumfries” have successively been its appellation—Dun, a castle, and fries, shrubs, is a plausible compound for the original name. Under whatever circumstances Dumfries was founded, it was undoubtedly a place of considerable size long before the days of William the Lion, and in his reign it was erected into a royal burgh. The site of this queen of Nithsdale is singularly picturesque, stretching along the bank of the Nith at an elevation sufficient to command a rich prospect terminating at the distance of a few miles in a chain of lofty hills, either cultivated or unbragous to their summits. There are so many attractions in and around Dumfries that the gentry of the neighbouring counties resort to it, imparting vivacity and all the delights of good society. The ancient monastery of Greyfriars, in this town, was the scene of a remarkable tragedy about the middle of the fourteenth century; this event was connected with the assassination of the Red Comyn, a powerful chieftain who formerly held the Regency of Scotland) by Robert the Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of Bruce's adherents.

Amongst the improvements of modern times may be named the erection of a suite of assembly rooms, market places, the widening of Bank street, and lighting the town with gas; a spacious quay has been constructed along the side of the town; and a fine Doric column, raised by the county of Dumfries, to the memory of Charles, Duke of Queensberry, who died in 1778, adorns the centre of the burgh. A very handsome statue of the poet Burns has been placed in Church place, close to Greyfriars church, and was unveiled by Lord Rosebery on the 6th April, 1882, amid great rejoicings. The figure, which is cut in Sicilian marble, and was executed at Carrara, from a model designed and prepared by Mrs. D. O. Hill, is represented in a position between sitting and standing, the head being slightly turned towards the right shoulder. A daisy is held between the finger and thumb of the left hand, the right hand being hidden beneath the folds of a shepherd's plaid, which is carelessly thrown over the shoulder. The statue, the cost of which was defrayed by subscription, is placed on a plain pedestal of dark grey granite at a height of about six feet from the ground. A Corn Exchange was opened on the 14th of March, 1877, at Whitesands, by the firm of Messrs. Kerr and Fotheringham, seed merchants. The Court House and County buildings are large elegant erections, in Buccleuch street, adjoining which is the gaol, comprising a very capacious court room and other offices. There is on an elevated site a new infirmary, a noble and spacious building, which is an ornament to the town. Circuit courts of judicary are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewartry of Kirkcubright and Wigtonshire; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriff's and judicary burgh courts. The station of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway is an important erection, giving animation to the south-eastern suburb of the town. The Theatre is a handsome building of stone, with a projecting portion; the interior is tastefully decorated. It was here that Kenn first emerged from obscurity to fame, and he never forgot the early patronage of the denizens of Dumfries.

A new and important line of railway from Dumfries goes through Castle Douglas, Gatehouse, Newton-Stewart, to Stranraer and Portpatrick, thence by steamer to the coast of Ireland, which is but twenty-one miles distant from the last-named town. The principal imports are timber, hemp, tallow, coal, slate, iron and wine; the exports consist of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool and freestone. The manufacture of woollen tweed is very extensively carried on here, and next in importance is the iron trade, the Dumfries Iron Works, of which Mr. James B. A. McKinnell is proprietor, being one of the largest structures of its kind in the south of Scotland. The manufacture of agricultural implements is the staple trade at these works, although steam boilers, railway contractors' wagon wheels, cranes, &c., are only a few among other articles manufactured. The Queensberry Iron Works, are owned by Messrs. Thompson and Beattie who are also noted makers of agricultural implements and wire fencing. Considerable business is also done in the hosiery trade, brewing, tanning, the manufacture of glue, &c. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hareskins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of hame fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. Several branch banking companies afford facilities to the monetary transactions of the town. The principal hotels are the King's Arms, the New George, the Station, the Queensberry Arms, the Wite Swan, and lastly the Globe, were the famous bard, Burns, spent many of his leisure hours, and many relics of him are to be seen at this hotel, which was and is still called Burns' Houff. Three newspapers are issued weekly, viz:—the Dumfries Courier, the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Herald, and the Dumfries and Galloway Standard and Advertiser; the latter, which is the leading newspaper in the south of Scotland, and has a large circulation, is noted for the completeness and accuracy of its reports and for the fulness of its news. A local tide and railway time table is published monthly by Messrs. Currie & Co. High street.

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nineteen councillors. The craftsmen were formerly divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convener, and another to be general box-master, all of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades; these distinctions, however (for distinctions of considerable importance they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the Reform Bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lochmaben, Saughar, and Kirkcubright, in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Ernest Noel, Esq. The numerous nursery grounds around the town are both useful and ornamental to the suburbs. The great desideratum of a copious supply of pure water has been attained, and the inhabitants have an abundance brought from ample sources, about five miles from the town.

The places of worship, including Maxwelltown, comprise three churches of the Establishment, four of the Free church, several United Presbyterian, an Episcopal, a Congregational, a Wesleyan, a Baptist, a Catholic Apostolic, and a Roman Catholic chapel, &c. Saint Michael's, or the mother church, claims peculiar notice on account of its cemetery, which contains numerous elegant and curious monuments; but the most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns; the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt, Esq., of London, and Turnerelli modelled the sculpture. By the erection of this monument, it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st of July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the churchyard of Saint Michael. This churchyard has been used as a place of burial for more than seven hundred years, and contains not a few monuments that are fated to attract attention, on account of their age as well as for other reasons. Conspicuous may be noticed the ruined monument of Provost Corsane, who had worn the badges of civic authority, as chief magistrate, bailie, and common councillor for forty five years; also the magnificent tomb of Francis Irving, who was M.P. for the burgh in 1617. Near the gate lies the dust of Bailie Paterson, to whom the Dumfries Academy is indebted for its educational endowments. In an enclosure surrounded by iron rails, we read

“In this cemetery, and chiefly within this enclosure, lie the mortal remains of more than 420 inhabitants of Dumfries, who were suddenly swept away by the memorable invasion of Asiatic cholera, A.D. 1832. That terrific pestilence entered the town on the 15th September, and remained till 27th November, during which time it seized at least 900 individuals, of whom 44 died in one day, and no more than 415 were reported recovered. That the benefit of this solemn warning might not be lost to posterity, this monument was erected from collections made in several churches in this town." The tombstones of William Grierson, William Welsh, and James Kirk, the three martyrs who suffered death on the Whitesands, the two former on January 2nd, 1667, and the latter June, 1665, are to be seen in the churchyard. Towering high above these lowly tombstones stands a pyramid of granite, erected in 1834, to show the reverence which is cherished in modern times for these and the rest of the noble army of the Nithsdale martyrs. The mausoleum and the profusion of funeral sculpture which adorn the cemetery are so attractive that it is a pity free ingress is not at all times permitted; the fee (threepence each to the mausoleum) doubtless prevents many a stranger from inspecting these beautiful memorials to the dead. On January 25th, 1859, the centenary of the birth of the great Scotch poet, a series of banquets, entertainments, &c. were held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and in this as well as in most other towns both in Scotland and England; poems were written in his honour, and at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, where a grand festival took place, a prize poem (being the best of seven hundred sent for approval) was recited. The last surviving son of the great poet, who had reached the mature age of eighty-one, was interred in the same vault as his father, February 28th, 1872. The tasteful Church of Saint Mary, on the north side of English street, is a graceful ornament to this approach of the town, and the cemetery around it is gradually being enriched with finely executed monumental sculpture. St. John's Episcopal church is a fine handsome Gothic building with tower and spire one hundred and twenty feet high, built from a design by Mr. W. Slater and Mr. R. H. Carpenter, Regent street, London, the foundation stone of which was laid in August, 1867, and is in full communion with the Scottish Episcopal church.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL, AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The Infirmary was founded in 1776, at a period when very few charities, of a similar nature, were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the south of Scotland. Medical advice and medicine are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c., and is under the management of governors. There is also the Crichton Royal Institution, endowed by the late James Crichton, Esq., of Friar's Carse, and incorporated by Act of Parliament, dated 3rd July, 1840, as an hospital for the insane and a home for mental and nervous invalids of the higher and middle classes. The grounds consist of about one hundred and fifty acres of land, pleasantly situated on an elevation overlooking the valley of the Nith, and have a south-western aspect and an extensive prospect, unequalled in the South of Scotland for variety and beauty, affording scope for extended exercise and recreation. Carriage exercise is also provided, and the patients are placed generally under the most favourable conditions for restoration to mental and bodily health. The Poor's Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor and destitute children, who are taught to read and write. It is governed by the magistrates, town council, &c., and is supported by a part of the collections from the church doors, numerous benefactions, donations, and annual subscriptions. It was founded in 1753, by the Messrs. J. and W. Muirhead, merchants. Dumfries is not behind other towns in its support of numerous religious and educational societies—both an infant and an industrial school are amongst the latter institutions. The commodious cottages or almshouses, founded by the benevolence of Mrs. Carruthers, are an interesting memorial of her philanthropy. The Dumfries Academy, established under its present designation in 1802, with a complete staff of masters, superseded two institutions—the Grammar School and the Commercial School, which till then existed in separate parts of the town. The date of the foundation of these schools is unknown, but mention is made of the Grammar School in the session clerk's records for 1638. In 1722, the masters in both schools were endowed by Bailie Paterson, of Dumfries, who bequeathed 15,000 merks to the magistrates and ministers of Dumfries for the benefit of the teachers; and in the following year by John Raining, of Norwich, to the extent of £500. The Bells bequest of £100 was left in 1789, the interest of which is given to the English master. The present commodious and handsome structure was built mainly by private subscription. For a few years the subscribers took a share in the management of the academy, but in 1814 it was handed over to the town council, under whose liberal and enlightened patronage it flourished till August, 1872, when, by the Education Act, it was transferred as one of the higher class public schools to the management of the Dumfries Burgh School Board.

The new Club House, in Assembly street, was formerly the old

Assembly rooms, but is now in possession of the Dumfries and Galloway Club. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Observatory Society have erected, on Corberry hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature in one of the most unique half-urban half-sylvan landscapes, and commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery; the cost, which exceeded one thousand guineas, was raised in 25 shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories—the lower one for the use of the keeper, three others for the accommodation of subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globes, mathematical instruments, newspapers and periodicals; and the upper story is set apart for a camera-obscura and prism. The grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, containing flowers and shrubs of various kinds.

The market days are Wednesdays. The two principal half-yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and Road fairs. Besides the usual commodities that change hands at these periods, many thousand head of cattle are bought and sold, and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, the 26th May or the Wednesday after; the third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, the third Wednesday in August, the third Wednesday in October, and the third Wednesday in November, for cattle (all old style). The parish of Dumfries embraces an area of 10,032 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 14,841, and in 1881, 16,836, the Royal Burgh at the last-named period numbering, 15,759. The population of the burghs of Dumfries and Maxwelltown combined at the same time contained 20,226, and the combined parishes of Dumfries and Troqueer (which include the burgh of Maxwelltown), 22,359.

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, in the parish of Troqueer, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kirkcubright, and connected with Dumfries by three bridges across the Nith. In no instance has the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the Crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village, notorious for disorderly conduct, it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, and councillors. Among the trading establishments are two saw mills, a tweed factory, and several good shops. The churches here are handsome and of modern erection. About a mile along the Maxwelltown bank of the Nith, are situated the ruins of Lincluden Abbey. This ecclesiastical structure was built about the middle of the twelfth century, by Uchtred, Lord of Galloway, as a convent for Benedictine nuns. In this capacity it continued till about the close of the fourteenth century, when it was suppressed by Archibald the Grim, Earl of Douglas, on account, it is alleged, of the irregularities of the inmates, and converted by him into a collegiate church for the numerous dependents of his family while they remained lords of Galloway. It existed as a college for behoof of a provost and twelve bedesmen till the Reformation, when Mr. Robert Douglas, an illegitimate son of Sir Robert Douglas, of Dramlanrig, who was provost of Lincluden when that great change occurred, continued to enjoy the benefice for forty years afterwards. Eventually the lands attached were converted into a temporal lordship and bestowed upon the family of Nithsdale. Afterwards the college became the property of the Nithsdale family, and here Lord Maxwell, in defiance of a Government edict, caused mass to be celebrated soon after the Reformation, on the 24th of December, 1585, and, as it has been said, "the choral swell with which the venerable walls rung on that occasion was as the dying requiem of the ancient faith," mass never having been since said or sung in the house of Uchtred. In later days it was a favourite resort of the poet Burns, and while musing beside its ruined walls he composed several of his pieces, the "Vision of Liberty" among the number. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 4,239, and in 1881, 4,537.

TROQUEER is a parish in the stewartry of Kirkcubright, lying on the river Nith near its mouth, and opposite to Dumfries; it is bounded by Terregles on the north, Lochruton on the west, and Newabbey on the south, extending about seven miles and a half in length, and four and a half broad. The parish has an area of 11,675 statute acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 5,402, and in 1881, 5,523. TERREGLES is also a parish situated near to Dumfries, but in the county of Kirkcubright. Population in 1881, 457.

DUNSCORE,

[HOLYWOOD AND KIRKMAHOE.

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcubrightshire on the south; it is twelve miles in length, and its breadth varies from one to four miles, and contains about 14,815 acres. The hills which surround it are healthy and good for pasture, and one of them, called Bogrie Hill, rises 1,200 feet above the level of the sea. The celebrated John Welsh, son-in-law to John Knox, was a native of Dunscore. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and cattle are reared of these lands for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes and turnips are produced in great quantities. The parish church is about nine miles from Dumfries, and seven from Moniaive; there are also in the parish a Free church and an United Presbyterian church. Robert Burns, at one time held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Ellesland, and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogising the Cluden river, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddel, Esq.

HOLYWOOD parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for ten miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from two to three miles; its acreage is about 8,940. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rites. The temple of these pagans was suc- ceeded by the cell of a hermit, which was subsequently changed into a house for monks of the Premonstratenses, in the beginning of the twelfth century, and the ruins of an old abbey in the churchyard are supposed to be the remains of that building. An Irish recluse, named Congal, seems to have been the founder, and he bequeathed both to the cell and the abbey the name of Dercongal, signifying "the Oakwood of Congal." The church, an exceedingly neat erection and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country, about three miles from Dumfries. In 1871 the parish contained a population of 1,504, and in 1881, 1,496.

KIRKMAHOE is a small modern village in the parish of its name, and district of Nithsdale, bounded by Closeburn, Kirkcubright, Tinwald, Dumfries, Holywood, Dunscore and Keir; it is four miles from Dumfries, situate on a rivulet tributary to the Nith, near the southern extremity of the parish. From some of the summits of its uplands a beautiful view is obtained of the pretty valley of the Nith, fringed in the distance by the Solway tide, and in the far back ground by Criffel and the Cumber- land mountains. The church is a handsome Gothic edifice. The lands of the parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations. Its acreage is about 12,558, and in 1871 it had a population of 1,382, and in 1881, 1,327.

ECCLEFECHAN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EAGLESFIELD, KIRTLEBRIDGE, AND WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE, NEWTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village, in the parish of Hoddam, 71 miles s. Edinburgh, 75 s.e. of Glasgow, 20 n.w. by rail from Carlisle, 16 e. of Dumfries, 6 n. of Annan, and 14 from Langholm, lying in a fine situation near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, within a mile of the station on the Caledonian railway. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, who have constantly a demand for the labours of the loom, and which enables the operative to enjoy many comforts, which they would otherwise be deprived of. Ecclefechan contains a few respectable shops, in which a variety of trades is carried on. Fairs are held for cattle, &c. on the Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the Tuesday after the 20th October; the Duke of Buccleuch, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings and for all cattle exposed for sale. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established in the town. Ecclefechan can boast of being the birth place of Thomas Carlyle, renowned for his quaint but powerful writings. The remains of the great philosopher were brought from London (where he died in the early part of 1881), and interred in the parish churchyard here. Within a short distance of the village are the remains of a Roman camp, said to be one of the most complete in Scotland. The parish of Hoddam contains about 7,564 acres, and had in 1871 a population of 1,593 persons, the village of Ecclefechan containing 846 of that number. In 1881 the parish numbered 1,446 inhabitants, and the village 800.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish lying on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan; it is about seven miles in length by four in breadth; acreage about 17,592. It abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its lime quarries, but much of the land is of rather poor quality. The village, a small one, is about two miles from Ecclefechan, and about twelve from Langholm. There is an Established church and parochial school.

EAGLESFIELD and KIRTLEBRIDGE are small villages in this parish, the former 2½ miles, and the latter, a station on the Caledonian railway, 3 miles from Ecclefechan.

WATERBECK is a village in the parish of Middlebie, about 3 miles from Kirtlebridge station on the Caledonian railway, and 4 miles from Ecclefechan on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been much improved by the late Mr. Robert Carlyle and his sons. It is notable for the large supply of wool, cured bacon and cheese, which it sends annually to the different markets. Here the United Presbyterians have a place of worship, built in the Gothic style of architecture, and there is a parochial school and a school for girls, supported by subscription, in the village. The population of Middlebie parish, in 1871, was 2,000, in 1881 1,926.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, HALF-MORTON, WESTERKIRK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANGHOLM is a thriving manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 78 miles s. from Edinburgh, 80 s.w. from Glasgow, 80 e. by n. from Dumfries, the like distance s.e. from Moffat, 21 n. from Carlisle, 18 n.n.e. from Annan, and 12 n. from Longtown, in Cumberland, delightfully situated on both sides of the Esk, over which there is a suspension bridge and also a stone bridge of three arches, from which may be seen the confluence of the Ewes and the Wauchope with the Esk. This parish and the adjoining ones of Canonbie, Ewes, Westerkirk, and Eskdalemuir are known as the "five kirks of Eskdale." The town of Langholm owes its origin to the border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all powerful Armstrongs, but is now only seen in a state of ruin. Within the memory of man no less than twelve such towers existed, and among them Wauchop Castle, the earliest seat of the Lindsay family, was in the immediate neighbourhood. The author of the "Picture of Scotland" says: "Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name was associated with many of its localities"; his tower of Gilnockie still stands, though converted into a cow-house, a few miles below Langholm, on the right bank of the Esk. It was on Langholm Holm that, when going to meet King James V., he and his "gallant companie" of thirty-six men ran their horses and "brak their spears." Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss Paul on the road between Langholm and Hawick; the story of the judicial execution of this border chief and his companions, by James V., is well known. The graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted churchyard at Carlenrig. This district is also associated with the covenanters, especially with the memory of Alexander Peden, one of the most famous of the Scottish worthies; a "knove," or small hill, commanding a delightful view of the valley, is still named "Peden's View," and at its foot rises "Peden's Well," where, in answer to his prayer, a mist is said to have "shrouded him from the dragoons who were seeking his life." Langholm is also the birthplace of Julius Meikle, translator of "Camoe Lucied," and author of the song "There's nae luck about the house."

BURNFOOT, on the banks of the Esk, is three miles from Langholm, and was the birthplace of the "four Knights of Eskdale," Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm, General Sir John Malcolm, Sir James Malcolm, and Sir Charles Malcolm, who in various ways distinguished themselves in various parts of the world. In the neighbourhood of Langholm there is a copious mineral well called Blouch Well, which is exceedingly efficacious in the cure of cutaneous diseases. It is less known than it should be, owing to the limited accommodation which as yet exists in its immediate neighbourhood. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the "riding times" or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. Within the last few years the trade of the town has increased in a very remarkable manner, the making of plaids and blankets for the neighbouring shepherds has developed itself into the manufacture of tweeds and other fabrics, which find their way into all parts of the kingdom, and large quantities are exported; they bear a character second to none in the woollen market. Instead of the one small mill which employed a few hands not many years ago not less than seven manufacturers now give constant employment to a continually increasing population. Now that there is railway communication, supplied by the North British Railway Company, affording an outlet to all parts of the country, there is little doubt that Langholm, with its inexhaustible water power, will become one of the most important manufacturing towns in the south of Scotland. It is built in the bosom of a lovely woodland scene, along the Edinburgh and Carlisle road, and is composed generally of good stone houses, roofed with blue slate. Two bridges—a handsome suspension and a stone one—connect the ancient town with a more modern suburb on the opposite side of the river, called New Langholm or New Town. Ruskin, in his book on modern painters, remarks, "There are perhaps no scenes in our own island more interesting than the wooded dingles which traverse them, the red rocks glowing out on either side and shelving down into the pools of their deep brown rivers, as at LANGHOLM and Jedburgh; the steep oak-copses climbing the banks, the paler plumes of birch shaking themselves free into the light of the sky above, and the fen arches of the monastery where the fields in the glen are the greenest, or the stones of the border tower where its cliffs are steepest, rendering both field and cliff a thousand fold more dear to the heart and sight." In the market place of the old town stands the town hall, gaol, and county police station, ornamented with a neat spire. Besides the woollen mills, already alluded to, the town contains a number of respectable shops, a branch each of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited and the British Linen Company, two distilleries, a brewery, dyehouse, tannery, and some excellent inns. There is likewise an elegant and commodious temperance hotel, in which is included the army and drill room of the Eskdale Rifle Volunteers (7th Dumfries-shire). A new police station and lock-up has been erected in Buccleuch square, New Town. The government of the town is vested in a baron bailie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is superior, and a police board, elected by the inhabitants. A Sheriff's small debt and a justice of peace courts are held at stated periods. The parish church, a modern structure, is allowed to be one of the most elegant and substantial in the south of Scotland; the other places of worship are a Free church, two United Presbyterian chapels, and one for the Moravian body, and a very handsome Mission Hall has just been erected, which is one of the finest of its kind in Scotland. A good parochial school, one endowed by the late Captain George Maxwell, of Broomholm, and one connected with the Free church are the institutions for instruction; the parochial and Free church schools are unusually large and commodious buildings. There is a very extensive and richly endowed library, which derives considerable advantage from a munificent bequest of the late Thomas Tolford, Esq., the celebrated engineer, who was a native of the district. A very neat and substantial stone building has just been erected for the use of the library, at a cost of about £2,300; £1,000 of this sum being a bequest of the late Alexander Reid, Esq., the remainder being raised by subscriptions. The inhabitants have thought into the town at a considerable expense, the copious spring, known as "White Well," whereby every family in the town is now amply supplied with the purest water. A monument to Sir John Malcolm stands on the hill behind the old town erected at a cost of £1,300, and there is another in the market place, in memory of his brother, Sir Pulteney Malcolm. The market day is Wednesday; fairs are held on the 16th April (for seeds), the last Tuesday in May (old style), 23th July (for lambs and wool), 18th September (for sheep), and 5th November (for cattle); there are also two hiring days—one in May and the other in November. There has been established a monthly sale of cattle, sheep, &c., and the Eskdale and Liddesdale Agricultural Society hold their show of stock generally in October, at which premiums are awarded. The entire parish of Langholm embraces an area of 16,371 statute acres, and in 1831 contained a population of 4,612, of this number the town had 4,380.

CANONBIE (or Canonby), a parish halfway between Longtown and Langholm, and on the southern border of the county, is separated on the south east from England by the river Liddel, whose romantic banks present some pleasing scenery, and on the south west by the "Scottish Dyke." The river Esk intersects the parish, dividing it into two equal parts. The parish is about nine miles long and six broad. The high road from Edinburgh to London runs through it. The kirk is a very large stone building, and will accommodate 1,400 persons. There is also a very handsome Free church. There are inexhaustible mines of coal and quarries of lime of excellent quality in the parish, but only a small part of them are wrought. The scenery along the Esk is considered to be the finest in the south of Scotland. The Howells is a hamlet situated about a mile from GILNOCKIE STATION, and near to which on the north is Gilnockie Tower. The Duke of Buccleuch is sole proprietor of the parish. The Langholm Railway, branching from the Bordon Union Line (North British) at RIDDINGS JUNCTION, intersects the parish. There are two stations—Canonbie and Gilnockie—the former being more convenient to the Cross Keys Hotel and the hamlets of Bow-Horn, FORGEREAHEAD, and GLENZIE, while the latter (Gilnockie) is nearest to CLYDE and HOWELLS. This parish, which embraces an area of 24,142 acres, in 1831 contained a population of 2,714.

ESKDALEMUR is a large and mountainous pastoral parish of 43,232 acres, on the north-eastern border of the county, and in the district of Eskdale; the manse, which is about the centre of the parish, is thirteen miles from Langholm. A very small portion of Eskdalemuir is under cultivation; the principal land proprietor is the Duke of Buccleuch. Population in 1831, 534.

The parish of EWES, situated on the eastern extremity of the county, is remarkable for its beautiful ranges of green hills, covered with verdure to their summits, and the clearness of the river, which affords excellent troutling. Numerous plantations on the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch add additional beauty to the lovely appearance of the west side of Ewes. The acreage of the parish is 24,941, and in 1831 it had a population of 337.

WESTERKIRK parish, containing about 26,992 acres, is also situated near the eastern boundary of the county about 6 miles from Langholm. Nearly the whole of this portion of the district is devoted to pasturage for sheep and black cattle; but there are several elegant villas, which in some degree relieve its otherwise monotonous appearance. The church stands on the left bank of the river Esk. Population in 1831, 478.

HALF-MORROW is a parish in the district of Eskdale, situated 9 miles s.w. of Langholm, and lying between Canonbie and Kirkpatrick-Fleming. The places of worship are comprised in Established and Free churches and an United Presbyterian chapel; there is also a Board school in the parish, which has an area of 6,084 acres, and in 1831 contained a population of 497.

LOCHMABEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TINWALD AND TORTHORWALD, AND THE VILLAGES OF COLLIN, ROUCAN, SMALLHOLM GREENHILL, HECK, HIGHTAE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the parish of the name, 65 miles s. from Edinburgh, 70 s.e. from Glasgow, 33 s.e. from Sanguhar, 30 n.w. from Carlisle, 31 s.e. from Thornhill, the same distance w. from Langholm, 15 s. from Moffat, 13 n.w. from Annan, 10 w.n.w. from Ecclefechan, 8½ n. by E. from Dumfries, and 4 w. from Lockerbie. It is situated in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. Few towns are situated in a district of so rich and varied beauty, and few are associated with so many historical events. It traces its origin to a very early age, and derives its name from its situation being among a number of beautiful lakes, or lochs; the loch on which it is so delightfully placed, (Lochmaben) signifying in Scotch-Irish "the lake on the white plain." The Castle Loch, which flows very near the south side of the town, is about three miles in circumference; the Mill Loch is somewhat of less dimensions, and lies on the north side of the town; this loch flows at times even up to the doors of the houses. In these two lochs there is a fish called the vendace, or vendise, which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with anywhere else in Britain. It is delicately formed, about six inches long, and resembles a young herring. How it came here is not exactly known; some suppose it to have been brought from La Vendee, in France, when Bruce's castle was a royal residence, and hence the name vendace. There is an annual vendace club, composed of gentlemen of the county, who meet once a year, about the end of July, to have a day's fishing and recreation on the Castle Loch. There is also another vendace club who fish in the Mill Loch. These two lochs, as well as four others of considerable extent, are much resorted to by boating and fishing parties, and form a very agreeable recreation both to the inhabitants and also to tourists and visitors. The Dumfries, Lochmaben and Lockerbie branch of the Caledonian line has a station here, and also others at AMSFIELD and SHIELDHILL.

The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength, which was built by Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Bruces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake which is called Castle Loch, and was surrounded by a deep moat, the outline of all which is still to be seen. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the same loch; this edifice with its outworks covered about 16 acres. After different grants to various relations of the Bruces, it was annexed by Parliament in 1487 to the Crown, and is now the property or in the keeping of the Earl of Mansfield. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted by James VI., and states that it is a renewal of charters granted by his illustrious predecessors; its date is 16th of July, 1612. From this charter it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c. totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequences. The municipal government is vested in a provost, one baillie, a dean of guild, a treasurer and five councillors. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Kirkcubright, Annan and Sanguhar in returning one member to Parliament. The town house, with its tower and clock, stands in the middle of the principal street, opposite to which there is a very handsome statue of Robert Bruce. A subscription library affords information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported. There are two Freemasons' lodges, two curling clubs, bowling green, and other associations. There is a branch establishment here of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited and also a Savings Bank for the town and neighbourhood. Lochmaben is not a place of much trade; with the exception of weaving stockings, shirts, &c., which is carried on to a considerable extent, there are no manufactures. It is a rural town, and a place of resort for tourists and strangers, who in the summer months visit it as a place of retirement and recreation.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells; the foundation stone was laid April 10th, 1818, and was opened for divine worship in July, 1820; the cost of its erection was about £3,000. It is capable of accommodating about 1,400 persons. The Free church, built in 1844, is a plain and neat structure, capable of accommodating 700 persons; the cost of its erection was about £800. There is a chapel for the United Presbyterians, and a Free church at HIGHTAE, about three miles from Lochmaben. Fairs for the sale of pork are held on the second and fourth Mondays in January, on the first and third Mondays in February and March, on the last Monday in November, and on the second and last Mondays in December; and for seeds on the third Monday in March.

Within the parish of Lochmaben there are also four villages known as the "Four Towns," viz.: SMALLHOLM, GREENHILL, HECK, and HIGHTAE. They are remarkable in Scotland as holding their lands by a peculiar tenure; the proprietors of lands in these baronies are called kingly tenants, and by successive warrants and protections of the King in 1592, 1602, and 1664, declared to have right to continue their possessions undisturbed and at their old rent, so long as they shall continue to pay the same. These baronies are said to have been conferred on the retainers of the Bruce, and many of the present holders can trace their ancestry for hundreds of years back. Son succeeds father, and the title is completed by the entry of the name in Lord Mansfield's Rental Book, and the usual solemnities of service and infeftment, otherwise common to the law of Scotland, are here unknown. The parish comprises 10,813 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 3,905; of this number the village contained 1,244. The numbers for 1881 were: for the parish, 2,817, and for the village, 1,217.

The small village of TINWALD, which is situated about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birthplace of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish is of a triangular figure, each side of which is about 4½ miles in length, and contains 10,283 acres; the northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. The greater part of the parish is arable; within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Amisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris. Population in 1871, 993; in 1881, 861.

The parish of TORTHORWALD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Moueald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish by the Lochr water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south, with an acreage of 6,881. The village, which is situated in the north of the parish, is about four miles from Lochmaben, and the same distance from Dumfries. In the vicinity are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwald, supposed to have existed since the 13th century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is the pleasing village of COLLIN, which contains the elevated residence of the late Mrs. Janet Coulthart, from whence extensive views are obtained of the surrounding country; and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish, which in 1871 had a population of 1,098, and in 1881, 986.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, SAINT MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH, HUTTON AND CORRIE, AND APFLEGARTH.

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town, in the parish of Dryfesdale, 65 miles S. of Edinburgh, 12 E. of Dumfries, 11 N.W. of Annan, 6 N.W. of Ecclefechan, and 4 E. of Lochmaben; situated on the great mail road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles S.E. of the former, and 26½ N.W. of the latter, and on the Caledonian railway for which line there is a station. It is also the junction for Lochmaben and Dumfries. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably for a long period its character was only that of a small hamlet, attached to and protected by the residence or stronghold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufactures have not yet made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, Limited, and another of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are established here; a Bank for Savings, opened in 1824, has been eminently successful. There are several good inns. A newspaper called the Annapdale Herald and Moffat News is published here every Thursday, and in Moffat every Friday, of which Mr. Halliday, Market place, is publisher and proprietor. The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. The free church is a handsome ornament to Bridge street, and the chapel belonging to the United Presbyterian congregation is a convenient building. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, and a Masonic lodge. The town is well lighted with gas. A few years ago a considerable sum of money was left by Mr. George Easton, of Chester, towards the erection of a Mechanics' Hall. The building, a stone one, is a neat erection in High street. Large and commodious school were erected in 1875, by the members of the School Board, at a cost of nearly £5,000. The market is held on Thursday; from the last week of November till the end of April it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there are sometimes sold in a single day, from £1,000 to £2,000 worth. There is also a market for hiring servants on the third Thursday in October (old style). Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August (all old style). The last fair, which is for lambs, is the largest and last lamb fair for Scotland—the number of lambs on the ground being, in some years, from 30,000 to 40,000. The remaining fairs are a new one, established for the sale of cattle, in September, the second Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas (all old style). These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended; the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Borough hill. The day following the lamb fair in August, races occasionally take place. The population of Lockerbie in 1871 was 1,950, and in 1881, 2,080.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale, and includes the town of Lockerbie; the extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles. The average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, add of the lower half about one and a half; about two thirds of the parish is lowland and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dyfe. Of the whole extent of the 10,231 acres in this parish, about 8,000 are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Whitewoollen Hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea. In 1871 the parish had a population of 2,825, and in 1881, 2,971.

HUTTON AND CORRIE is an united parish in the district of Annandale, and situated about six miles N.E. of Lockerbie. It extends twelve miles in length from north to south, by a general breadth of about three and is bounded on the east by Eskdalemuir, by Wamphray and Applegarth on the west, and Tundergarth on the south. There is a Board school and an Established church in the parish, which has an area of 23,923 statute acres; in 1871 it contained a population of 842, and in 1881, 814.

SAINT MUNGO parish is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes; it is distant about three miles from the village of Ecclefechan, and three miles from the town of Lockerbie. Castlemilk is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley. This was originally the seat of the ancient lords at Annandale. Much later it belonged to the Maxwells and the Douglasses; it has been recently purchased from George Armstrong, Esq., by a member of the Jardine family. In the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the Duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired on that occasion were found in 1771, when planting, a spot afterwards called "The Cannon Holes." The present proprietor, Robert Jardine, Esq., M.P. has erected a new mansion near to the one above mentioned. The Established church is a splendid stone edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, erected at a cost of £5,000, and was opened on the 7th of January, 1876. It was the gift of Robert Jardine, Esq., M.P. of Castlemilk. There is also a parochial school in the parish, which contains about 4,897 acres. The population of the parish in 1871 was 658, and in 1881, 683.

TUNDERGARTH, a parish of 10,482 acres, in which a great number of sheep is pastured, is separated from that of Saint Mungo on the west, and is nearly thirteen miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles in its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill called Burnswark overlooks the district from the south. There is an Established church and a parochial school in the parish. This parish contained in 1871 a population of 510, and in 1881, 466.

APFLEGARTH (or Applegirth) is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben. In length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward the same. It is bounded by Wamphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village, or hamlet rather, lies on the banks of the Annan, three miles from Lockerbie, and about eleven miles from Dumfries. There are a steam saw mill, two railway stations, an Established church, and two parochial schools in the parish. Applegarth and Sibbaldie, which comprise an area of 11,869 acres, in 1871 contained a population of 902, and in 1881, 969.

SIBBALDIE, a small village in the parish of Applegarth, is three miles from Lockerbie, and contains a woollen mill, also a parochial school; and Balgray, the residence of James Jardine Patterson, Esq. is near the village.

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA, AND WAMPHRAY, AND THE HAMLETS OF CRAIGIELANDS AND HOPPERTOOTIE.

MOFFAT is a large parish of 42,965 acres, in the interesting district of Annandale. The town, which has been styled the "Baden of Scotland," is small, airy, cleanly, and very respectable, 51 miles
s. of Edinburgh, 57 s.e. of Glasgow, 14½ n. of Lockerbie, 41 n.w. of Carlisle, and 21 n. of Dumfries; situated about 1½ miles from Beat-tock station, on the Caledonian Railway, to and from which omnibuses run (from the Annandale and the Baecleuch Arms Hotels) to meet all trains. By this railway access is easy to the metropolis and the neighbouring towns, as well as to Carlisle and England generally. During the season omnibuses also ply from these inns to St. Mary's Loch, on the Selkirk road—passing Frenchland Tower, the lands of Dumericoff (Lord Rollo), Craigieburn, celebrated in song by Burns, Hogg, &c., (J. Proudfoot, Esq.), Capplegill (Mrs.
Johnstone), Bodsbeck Hill, the scene of Hog's tale of "The Brownie," "The Grey Mare's Tail," sung in Scott's "Marmion," Loch Skene, a wild and solitary taru, and are met at St. Mary's Cottage (Tibbie Shiel's) by conveyances from Peebles and Selkirk, whence there are railways. The town stands 878 feet above the level of the sea, and upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of and embraced by a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries-shire, with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north, and east. The huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes: some covered with wood, others beautifully chequered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash, affording shelter and enclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly (though chiefly) pasture. The progress in these pursuits has been of late very remarkable, as shown in the rise in the price of land, and the reputation of the farm stock of the breeders in the neighbourhood. The principal street of the town (High street) is wide and spacious, laid down upon the principal recommended by the late J. L. McAdam, and is clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain. It is lined with ranges of excellent shops, well supplied with the necessities and luxuries of life, and even the branch streets are being pressed into the service of commerce. Within the last twenty years building has progressed rapidly on the roads leading from the town proper, where there are many beautifully-situated villas, cottages, &c. most of which are let furnished to visitors for the season or a longer period, as may be agreed upon.

In November, 1875, an ornamental drinking fountain was erected in the centre of the town, and consists of a pedestal of rough sandstone, surmounted by the figure of a ram cast in bronze; it was the gift of William Colvin, Esq. of Craigielands. A short distance from the town is a hydropathic establishment; the building, which is of great extent, is of red sandstone, and has a grand and imposing appearance. It was commenced in June, 1875, and contains nearly two hundred apartments, including dining, billiard, smoking, and numerous sitting rooms, &c. and has accommodation for over 300 visitors, and is one of the handsomest and best conducted establishments of its kind in Scotland. The town commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows, and cornfields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which has its source in an extraordinarily strange and wild ravine in this district, named the "Devil's Beef Tub," and runs at a distance of about two hundred yards along the south-west of the town, then glides away to meet its neighbouring streams, the Evan and the Moffat, which unite about five miles below. The surrounding plantations, every year increasing in extent and beauty, and the cultured strath, the tree-garnished hill, the legendary turret, ancient Roman camps and roads, beautiful walks, and the copse and thicket tree to the feet of the visitor, supply the eye with pleasure and the frame with health. About four miles north-west from hence there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road maker, John Loudon McAdam, died in this town, on the 26th November, 1836, in his 81st year; he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to tho locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life. Upon one of his sons was conferred the honour of knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age and growing infirmities. Mr. M'Adam received from Government £10,000, in two separate instalments. To his credit it is recorded that, during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer. On the 18th September, 1860, the eminent civil engineer, Joseph Locke, M.P. (born at Attercliffe, 1806), assistant and pupil of George Stephenson, died in Moffat, whilst enjoying the sports of the shooting season. There are three principal inns, admirably conducted by their respective proprietors, namely, the Annandale Arms, the Buccleuch Arms, and the Star, while a fourth, the Beattock Bridge Hotel, lies south of the town and near the railway. The Star is an elegant inn, erected a few years ago; the Buccleuch Arms (formerly Cranston's Private Hotel) has been enlarged, refitted and improved as a public inn; while the Annandale Arms is a place of old repute, and the Beattock Bridge Hotel is known to all travellers. There are likewise in the town well frequented bath rooms, to which a spacious news-room is attached for the use of visitors; these are under excellent management. The large hall of the bath-room is used for concerts, lectures, &c., and during the summer a subscription band is added to the other attractions, which disperses "the concord of sweet sound" to the promenaders; on every Friday evening during the season there is a ball. On the same premises there is a small but neat and well kept bowling green, as well as a billiard room. The other chief buildings are Moffat House (the town residence of the superior, J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale), the Established, the Free and the United Presbyterian churches; the latter, a handsome structure erected at a cost of about £3,000, was opened for worship in July, 1864; an Episcopal church, a wooden structure, was erected in 1865, which was superseded by the present handsome iron building in 1873; the former place is now used for the purpose of an Odd-fellows' Hall. There are also three branch banks and a savings bank, the Academy, and Morrison's school. There is a subscription library containing upwards of 4,000 volumes, and two newspapers, the Annandale Herald and Moffat News, and the Moffat Times, the former published on Friday and the latter on Saturday, while each contains a visitors' list.

Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort for invalids and pleasure seekers, and for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphurous and two chalybeate; the sulphurous spring is distinguished by the name of "Moffat Well," and is about a mile from the town; a very good carriage road leads to it, and during the summer omnibuses ply between it and the town. The "Fons Moffettensis" was described in Latin, in 1659, by Matthew MacKail, as a spring possessing great healing virtues, sufficiently well known to excite interest; it is now upwards of 270 years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, and also by visitors from England and in some instances from Ireland; of late the summer visitors have so increased as to be numbered by thousands. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of bilious complaints, also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating an appetite and promoting digestion, and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism; it sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain, whither the summer sojourners hie early in the morning, on foot or per omnibus. Hartfell Spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson; it issues from a rock of slum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat; it may be carried to any distance, but it will not keep good for more than four days; it is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex. The other chalybeate is of a peculiar nature, and obtained in a very curious manner, namely, by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell, called "Gartpool Linn," in the vicinity of the town. The surface of this rock is strongly impregnated with sulphate of alumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently, taken in smaller portions, not more than a wine-glass full at a time. The exquisite scenery of this Linn has been laid out in walks by the munificence of the late proprietor, the Hon. Butler Johnstone, and is freely open to the public. The different rivers supply abundance of amusement to the trout angler, and the celebrated alpine lake Loch Skene, whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea, contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the "Gray Mare's Tail," tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about 800 feet above the level of the vale, and which appears from the opposite side of the glen to be one unbroken fall. This is the loftiest fall in the British Islands; it pours its waters into the infant Moffat, which flows on through a grand narrow pass, until it sweeps through the domains of Dumcrieff, the property of Lord Rollo, and loses itself in the Annan.

Moffat was constituted a burgh by the adoption (1864) of the Police Act, and now possesses a commission invested with powers for the sanitary improvement of the burgh, the holding of monthly courts, and other matters concerning health and morals. Moffat is the seat of a sheriff's small debt (local) court, and the justice of peace courts are held on the first Friday of April, August and December. Moffat has been the birth-place of several notables, eg.—Nicholaus de Moffet, Bishop of Glasgow (1260-1270); Robert Johnstone, LL.D., author of a "History of Scotland," &c.; Walter Boyd, banker, of Boyd, Benfield and Co.; William Dickson, a writer on slavery; William Murray, the chronometrist; and Dr. D. Welsh, moderator of the first Free Church Assembly. The late Peter Johnston, Esq., of Harthope, endowed in the parish a side school, at Evan Water, and a female industrial school, beside the Ladies' Knowe. Friday is the weekly market day. There are two half yearly hiring markets—the first is held on the third Friday in March (old style), the second on the Friday after the 19th of October. A fair for lambs is held in July, on the Friday after Langholm. There is also an annual sheep and cattle market called the Top Fair in September, on the Friday after the Falkirk Tryst, at which time a flower, sheep, cattle, &c. show or rather a combination of shows, is held, to which, by its excellence, great crowds are attracted. The district is noted for its breed of chevrots; there is a grand annual sale of rams of that breed held at the Beattock Hotel on the day before the Top Fair. Some choice specimens of stock are always forwarded, and prices per head have repeatedly exceeded one hundred guineas. The population of Moffat parish, which contains 42,965 acres, in 1871 was 2,643, and of the town 1,790; in 1881 the numbers were: for the parish 2,926; for the town 2,000.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA derives its name from its vicinity to a chapel, of which the ruins are yet visible, formerly dedicated to the famous missionary, meaning the "lands nigh to the kirk of Saint Patrick;" it is situate in the upper district of Annandale, bounded on the north by Moffat, and on the east by Wamphray, and contains 22,409 acres. The celebrated Gartpool Linn is in this parish; likewise the Castle of Achencaess, the ruins of which cover a considerable extent of ground; it was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David "the Bruce," and subsequently was in the possession of Douglas of Morton; its antiquity, therefore, is unquestionable. The modern castle of Achencaess is a structure of considerable extent, and splendidly situated on a rising ground, near the Evan Water. The old tower of Loch-house is supposed to have been re-built by James Johnstone, of Corehead, chamberlain to Bishop Whiteford, of Brechin, whose daughter the chamberlain married, and with her obtained possession of the extensive lands belonging to the bishop, in Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Moffat. Loch-house is now inhabited by a cottier or herd, who has his cot within its walls. There are other ruins of ancient edifices, viz.:—a chapel a little to the N.W. of Moffat, which excites some interest and is worthy of survey. The summer residence of James Smith, Esq., Craigielands; and the elegant mansion of Marchbank-wood (Miss Johnstone), near which is also Beattock House, a fine modern building, are the only modern mansions of any note in the parish. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture, though it is being rapidly subdued to the plough. CRAIGIELANDS and HOPPERTOOTH are hamlets in Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Population of Kirkpatrick-Juxta parish in 1871, 1,091, and in 1881, 1,064.

JOHNSTONE parish is in the district of Annandale, adjoining Kirkpatrick-Juxta; it is six miles in length, and three in breadth, and contains 13,490 acres. The remains of Lochwood tower, situate at the northern end of the parish, in the centre of a venerable and picturesque wood, and surrounded by impassable bogs, are the only vestiges of antiquity, sufficiently interesting to attract attention, in the parish. Regarding the now unknown personage by whose orders it was originally erected, James VI. is recorded to have remarked, that "however honest he might have been in outward appearance, he must have been a rogue at heart." Robert, natural brother to the chieftain, Lord John Maxwell, of Nithsdale, burnt it down in savage gloe in the sixteenth century, during the clanish quarrel, which resulted in the battle of Dryffe Lands; John James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale, is proprietor, and occupies an elegant mansion, called Raxhills, the only notable residence in the parish. There is nothing peculiar to be observed respecting this local portion of the district, further than that (on the authority of a late reverend minister) "in this populous rural parish there is neither public-house nor meeting house, nor village, nor prison, nor lawyer, nor beggar," all of which is true still. It has four well conducted schools, and the educational, moral and religious interests of the parish are carefully and efficiently attended to. The parish churchyard contains the family vault of the House of Annandale. The heritors of this parish erected, in 1862, a parochial school, with house for the master, and library attached, at a cost of five hundred and fifty pounds; the library contains over one thousand volumes. Population of Johnstone parish in 1871, 1,089, and in 1881, 1,002.

The parish of WAMPFRAY receives its name from its situation emphatically expressed by the Gaelic word Uamh-fir, signifying "the den in the forest." Agreeably to this etymology, the church stands in a deep wood recess, by the side of Wamphray water, which brawls and thunders its way through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks clad with thriving plantations, or by lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and sportively adorned by saplings of ash rising from their interstices. This parish adjoins Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Johnstone; it is of an oblong figure, six miles and a half in length, by three in breadth, with an acreage of 13,135. There are but four resident proprietors. The Caledonian Railway runs through the parish, and has a station here. Population in 1871, 505, and in 1881, 455.
